JOSIAH TURNER, Jr., EDITOR.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1869

(From the Detroit Free Press.)

A REMARKABLE NEGRO—THE PRINT OF A WHITE HAND OVER HIS HEART—AN OIL SKIN BAG AROUND HIS NECK.

Yesterday afternoon, near the foot of Cass street, a negro who had lately arrived on a vessel, disrobed himself and proceeded to take a swim under the dock. After disporting for a while, a strange mark on his left breast caught the eye of some idlers, and as he came out to don his garments, an investigation revealed a curious freak of dame Nature. While the rest of the body was coal black, a spot just over the heart was a perfect imitation of a small hand, and the finger and thumb, which were delineated very distinctly, were as white as the skin of any Caucasian. The palm of the hand was there, four fingers, spread apart, the thumb partially bent down—in fact, just as if a child of six or eight had laid a hand on the dark skin and burned its impress into the flesh. During the conversation which ensued, the man stated that the mark was one of distinction; that Providence had placed it there as a sign that he would be a great doctor and spirit medium; and perform wonderful charms and cures.

Around his neck was an oil skin bag, holding, perhaps, half a pint, and in this, he stated, were charms that would keep away evil spirits, and protect him from sickness and death. He refused to let his questioners see the charms, but allowed them to handle the sack, the contents of which felt like glass, nails, pebbles, &c. The negro was, he said, a great "fetish man" among his race in Buffalo. If anything ailed one of them, he could produce a cure by letting them hold the bag in their hands; if they lost any property, he slept with the bag under his pillow for three nights in succession, and on the third night he was sure to dream just who took the property, if it was stolen, and where it then was if it had been lost.

He said he could detect a man who wanted to steal, by just 'guring his eyes on him so—" and he crossed his huge optics and squinted over the crowd in a way that made an old peanut woman drop her basket from fright. Whether or not he observed any would be thieves among the spectators did not transpire, as the "fetish man" felt compelled to go aboard his vessel just then. How the singular marks came on his breast he could not tell; it was there when he could first remember. By touching the white skin of the finger imprints, one could see a red spot appear after the touch, and see almost in the delicate veining back and forth. Another curious feature, and one most difficult of explanation, was the statement of the man, that whenever he caught cold the fingers twitched and clenched, as if it were causing him intense pain.

THE HARPERS.

The New York correspondent of the Boston Gazette writes of the Harpers:

Their invariable rule has been this:—Those foreign authors that we reprint nobody else shall reprint; if any one does, we will kill their edition by selling ours below cost. So resolutely have they followed this plan that every publisher who has crossed their path has had cause to repent of his temerity, and others who would have been glad to throw down the gauntlet to them, have wisely let." I dare not wait upon I would." The policy pursued by the Harpers has seemed harsh, but probably under any other plan, with their long and valuable list of English authors, every unfledged publisher would have a picking in their preserves. A history of the different warfares in which they have been engaged would reveal not a few interesting facts in literary history.

Their large capital has for many years enabled them to be indifferent whether special issues were profitable or not, and they would unhesitatingly throw away large sums, if necessary, to kill off a rival's book. The most interesting and lively of all their contests was that with Winchester some twenty years ago. Winchester was ruined in the end, but for a long time he made a plucky fight. This was in the height of the cheap novel mania, when Bulwer, James, Mrs. Gray, Miss Pickering, and other popular novelists were turning off fiction by steam. Every steamer brought over a batch of English novels, and sometimes in less than thirty hours, both the Harpers and Winchester would have editions in the market—the one that was two hours ahead getting the cream of the sale. Newsboys in those times used to dash through the streets with a new novel just as they did during the war with a war "extra," and people bought the books in almost as high an excitement. The moment a copy of a new novel by Bulwer or James was received, it was hurried into the composing room, the doors locked, and not a soul allowed to leave the premises until the book was printed, and ready for the dealers. Those were spicy times in the book world.

STREET ETIQUETTE.—WALKING WITH LADIES.—Only villagers or persons with rural ideas any longer contend that ladies should always be given the inside of the pavement in passing. The rule adopted in cities is to turn to the right; whether the right leads to the wall or to the gutter, and an observance of this common sense rule would obviate much unpleasant "scrouging" by over gallant gentlemen who persistently crowd for the outside of the walk. As to her common custom, and required by fashionable etiquette, and one which is nearly as inexplicable and absurd as the practice of a whole string of men filing out of a church pew, making themselves as ridiculous as an "awkward squad" practicing at "facing step." In order to give a woman the wrong call on the pew, is that of a man; when on a promenade or a walk with a lady, to keep himself on the outside of the pavement. A little exercise of judgment will forever stay pardon of the utter uselessness of this bobbing back and forth at every corner. The common rule is this: If a man and woman are walking she should always be at his right arm, whether it be toward the inside or outside of the walk; then the woman will not be shoved against the pavers.

MEXICO LOVE-MAKING.—A Mexican dramatic writer, being caught in a shower of rain, took refuge under the portico of a handsome dwelling in New York. As soon as he had taken the position, a window was opened, and a lovely female face appeared, which seemed to beam with sympathy and anxiety. She soon retired and sent him an umbrella by a servant. He at once fell desperately in love, and, thinking from her anxious looks that the feeling was reciprocated, he called on her in the morning, sent up his card, and gave into her hands a very nice umbrella he had purchased in place of the old shabby one he had borrowed, and then wound up by making a profession of love. The young lady, without even noticing the exchange that had been misinterpreted, calmly replied: "I feel it to be my duty to undeceive you, sir. At the time of the shower, I was anxiously expecting the arrival of a gentleman, who is, I confess, very dear to me, who wished to see me in private, and my only motive for sending you the umbrella was to get you off the steps."

FAN FLIRTATION.—For the benefit of our young lady readers, some at least of whom are not supposed to be posted in the mute language of the fan, we give the following directions for carrying on a flirtation:

Fan fast.—I am independent.
Fan slow.—I am engaged.
Fan with right hand in front of face.—Come on.
Fan with left hand in front of the face.—Leave me.
Open and shut.—Kiss me.
Open wide.—Love.
Open half.—Friendship.
Shut.—Hate.
Swinging the fan.—Can I see you home?
Fan by right cheek.—Yes.
Fan by left cheek.—No.
To carry in the left hand.—Desirous of getting acquainted.
Carry with handle to lips.—I will flirt with you.

The following curious and characteristic legend is inscribed in French on the tombstone of Martin Fercol, a celebrated French taxidermist who died at Bourgogne, in 1849, at the age of one hundred years:

Here lies a Centenarian:
Martin Fercol.
A distinguished Naturalist, born at St. Cyrille (Landes,) August 12, 1749;
Died at Chateau-la-Garenne, in Bourgogne.
On the same day of the year 1849;
And therefore exactly one hundred years old.
A enthusiastic zoologist and determined misanthrope
He sought the friendship of beasts
As zealously as he disdained that of men.
Forgetting that Christ died for the latter.
By his side has since been laid
The bones of his sister, Babette;
Her flesh having been devoured by ants.
In accordance with her own wish.

P. F. PESCUD & SON.

The CASH PLAN will as strictly be observed.—We must have the cash or its equivalent, on delivery of goods.

The Senior partner returns his thanks to his friends, and the public generally, for their generous support for the past 25 years, and hopes it will be continued to the new firm, who will use their utmost exertions to merit and share increased patronage.

All indebted will please pay up this month, as my old business must be closed up.
