THE MOUND BUILDERS OF UTAH.

BY MARAHEN DISCOVERIES.

TRACES OF A PAST CIVILIZATION.

About six weeks ago, our old and esteemed friend and former Professor, Henry L. Scott, LL.D., of Georgetown, D. C., passed through Omaha on a scientific tour.—One of his letters to the Manchester, (England) Chronicle, is perhaps, the only attempted analyzation and description of the now celebrated obsidian beds of the middle and north parks of Colorado. For the first time, on the appearance of that letter, we learned what a most egnite was; that it was simply a piece of glass made through the fusion of sand and pyrites by volcanic action. Having thoroughly explored that section, and having acquired many valuable additions to science, which will shortly be done bed in the Smithsonian reports. Professor Scott entered Utah for the purpose of furthering, if possible, the discoveries of Squire and Davis, in reference to the existence of a superior race of people on this continent long before the advent of the present aboriginal inhabitants. The reports of the investigations of Squire and Davis was not brought down later than 1846, and only embraced the country lying between the great lakes and the Gulf of Mexico. Professor Scott, like every scholar, accepted as true the evidence produced by these gentlemen, but at the same time felt confident in his own mind that the people who had genius and skill enough to erect the vast mounds of Newark and the little Miami, and the elaborate and skillful defences in and about Kanokia, Illinois, were certainly competent to find another route to Mexico and Central America than down the Valley of the Mississippi. Acting upon this impression, he early commenced with us and others in reference to the probable existence of traces of the march of these people to the Gulf of California. Fortunately, we were enabled, to offer him encouragement, and on the 24th of June he left the Union Pacific Railroad at Evanston Station, Shelby County, Utah, and commenced his explorations. Evanston lies in the upper valley of Bear River, at the foot of the northwestern slope of the Uintan Mountains, and has an elevation of 7,000 feet above tide water. Having secured the help of some half dozen men, Professor Scott immediately directed his course toward the South, where a bastard canon starts out from one of the Uintan spurs.—Fortunately he had with him a half breed who could converse with the Shoshonees, who range all through that section, and, through the interpreter, he learned from Wa-pa-boota (Stag,) a sub-chief of the Shoshonees, that about fifteen miles from Evanston was found a mound of extraordinary dimensions. The professor immediately repaired to the place, and to his gratification, discovered a tumulous of as fair and positive proportion as any described by Squire and Davis. He immediately commenced the work of excavation, and in three days had the inexpressible pleasure of laying bare what was certainly a vault. He found a cavity about eight feet long, three wide and four deep. Its bottom, sides and ends were made of triangular-shaped stones, evidently quarried from the red granite of the Wahsatch range. There was no top or covering to the vault, but from the nature and color of the earth immediately over it, the professor thinks that an arch of burnt clay had been used. With the exception of some unimportant pieces of obsidian, evidently having been used for lapidary's purposes, Professor Scott brought away everything found in the vault. But one skeleton was found, which, on exposure, immediately crumbled into dust; it appeared to indicate that of a man not over five feet ten inches. The bones lay east and west—the skull east. At the foot, and apparently between the feet, was found an ordinary shaped earthen pot, with a capacity perhaps of a half a gallon, cone shaped, and without any mark or engraving on it. Along the left side lay an iron bracelet with a spring clasp, perfectly preserved. On each side of the stone were two medicine stones—shaped like a reign, and full of holes, and of half a pound each. The stones were very similar to Tennessee marble or Scotch granite. On the right side of the skeleton the Professor found a silver plate, about the size and exactly the shape of an artist's pallet. No mark whatever was distinguishable on this piece, but it is of the purest silver. It may have been used as a shield, though the professor inclines to the belief that it was a "charm," and the skeleton was that of some medicine man or priest. The value to science of this discovery of Professor Scott, we are glad to say, does not consist in the supposed antiquity of the articles exhumed. Other and more positive evidence corroborates his impression that the vault he laid bare is of more than 1,500 years existence. This excavation, to be speedily followed by others under the direction of the Smithsonian Institute, we feel confident will establish the fact that the mound builders crossed the Missouri River, and, passing over the plains of the great West, found—a portion of them their way to Central America via the Gulf of California. Professor Scott left for Kansas, for his home in Kentucky, and we shall anxiously look for his report of these discoveries.

VICISSITUDES OF FAMILIES.

There has just been published in London a new and remodelled edition of Sir Bernard Burke's "Vicissitudes of Families."—Nothing more exemplifies the truth of the well-worn maxim about truth being stranger than fiction than these stories of the historian. The great great grandson of Margaret Plantagenet, the daughter and heiress of George, Duke of Clarence, only so lost back as 1697, was a cobbler at Newport, in Shropshire. Among the lineal descendants of Edmund of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, sixth son of Edward I, entitled to quarter the royal arms, is now employed as a toll collector on the Erie Canal, at Holland Patent, in this State. Another descendant of the latter is Mr. George Wilson, teller of the Yale of Conway Bank, near Bradford, who died in 1858. A few years ago Sir Bernard Burke found in a common pauper, at Dudley, the last representative of a noble family. In tracing the lineal descendants of Robert Bruce, King of Scotland, he came upon a man who was a common sailor, and who died in the United States Navy. In this new edition of "Vicissitudes" the author has removed much of the irrelevant matter of his earlier work, and made numerous additions to the principal one, which make it a complete and most interesting record.

I HAVE THIS DAY associated with me my son, JOHN S. PESCUD, and the firm hereafter will be conducted under the style of
P. F. PESCUD & SON.
The CASH PLAN will be strictly observed. We must have the cash or its equivalent, on delivery of goods.
The former partner returns his thanks to his friends, and the public generally, for their generous support for the past 30 years, and hopes it will be continued to the new firm, who will use their utmost exertions to merit and share increased patronage.
All indebted will please pay up this month, as my old business must be closed speedily.
