The Daily Sentinel. JONAS TURNER, JR., EDITOR. SIGNAL LIGHT.—Some persons have the habit of complaining. The complaint is made in the eye, across the nose, up the ear, and so on, and all to turn the instrument, that other scenes may come in view. Each combination of the rising fragments seems to fair that things we hope not to think. As it is out with human life, the heart grows fed of personal scenes and incidents, and they are done in the future can bring about some joy or grief. The soul shrinks back from change. For in the constant changes of the future it can see as much of dark and light, of joy or grief. Hence, people live, though full of joy, were never for that bit of future life. It is not so indeed with all. They only live with transportation on the present scene of life, when up, half drawn, does not reveal its hidden things. They, to whom life is all of a piece, and a never, and they, who only see the present, the veil that hides the future, but others, who see the whole, and the future, long to see the veil, and look for the spirit, which here and there, in the future, will have some, and every good to them, come, come, and the revelation of the future. These men with anxious eyes to the future, and their eyes, peering on their way, by some which their feet see. But people, as a rule, will long to see the veil, and look for the spirit, which here and there, in the future, will have some, and every good to them, come, come, and the revelation of the future.
