JOSIAH TURNER, Jr., EDITOR.

CHURCH ETIQUETTE.

As all persons are not as perfect in church etiquette as they might be, the following suggestions may not be out of place:

Attending divine worship is not the attending a public show, though in this age there are some whose conduct make the difference appear but small.

First, then, if you are late enter as any place, like the Brigands of Jolliboro' Jones; it avails when the rules of the Chesterfields and the Hicksons often make one ridiculous. In entering church with a lady, precede her when ascending and descending stairs, as also in seeking a seat. In the latter case it is specially polite—you act as a sort of shield to her modesty, and then you save her the confusion of selecting a pew.

It is proper, if you are a believer, to kneel or stand at prayer, according to the custom of the church. To disregard these is vulgar—at least it shows too much false pride, or too little reverence for the requirements of Christianity.

Excessive whispering during service is decidedly vulgar. It is sometimes necessary to address an undertone remark to your companion or companions, but seldom.

Listen to the service—especially the sermon. In this age of church opera, called music, you cannot help hearing that part of the ceremony. It would wake up a Van Winkle. But the sermon you must not sleep over or disregard. It is wrong. Appear to hear if you do not. A good way is when the minister is dull, and you can't listen, which happens often enough to make a rule—to study physiology, examining the bumps of minds before you. An hour may be passed thus politely and pleasantly.

If you chew tobacco, or spit out it in church. It is annoying to those around you, and then the sexton gives you jesse.

Never leave church during service, unless it is absolutely necessary—as in sickness, a house a-fire or a professional call.

It is vulgar to come late. Sometimes it is unavoidable—a person wishes to display a new dress, watch chain or perhaps a beau. It will occur sometimes that a poor goose wants to be driven from his nest—then it is proper enough to ride. These cases, and the like, excuse the coming, and the congregation should think. Any other delay is undurable.

Dress as plainly as possible. We don't mean that a lady should appear in her morning wrapper over a gentleman in his shirt sleeves. A nice medium is the thing in all matters—ladies should not be taken for milliner's show cases, nor gentlemen for be-jewelled and wrist-doll monkeys. A plainness suits an Christian as shows fine clothing, an aristocrat, to show respect to God.

In entering and in leaving the house, don't walk too slow like the shoddies, nor too fast like the heathens. In the one case people ridicule you for affectation; in the other there is danger of knocking down the pews or running over somebody. "Haste slowly."

When you look around too much in church, people think you want to show your wealth, or that you want to attract attention to gay styles, or that you want to marry, or that, like poor sheep, there is not weight enough about your head to keep it still.

Don't look too gloomy in church either—it is as suspicious as too much levity. Religious worship is neither a joke nor an emetic. If you feel extraordinarily down hearted, go to thank about putting something in the treasury, and it will shorten your sins quicker, and spread over it the pleasant look of duty.

A CHEERFUL FACE.

It "doeth good like a medicine." Every one knows how instinctive a thing is sympathy with the feelings around us. You meet a friend who has a fit of the "blues"—his face is long, his manner sad, his voice low and melancholy. If your own feelings were previously bright, they are suddenly darkened. The effect is that of a dash of cold water on a flame, that a gentle puff of wind would have caused to fan to a steady blaze. There come times of trial to us all, when we go wearing, as it were, a garment, and when it behooves us to wear it. I do not allude to such times as those when we go, as sympathizing friends, in a dress of mourning. We are accustomed to "weep with them that weep." But amid the vexations and perplexities and fretting cares of our every day life, to carry even a cheerful countenance, how sweet it is! sometimes Low heroic! "There comes my teacher," said a little girl, as a fair, sunny faced woman opened the school room door. "She always looks happy." A happy teacher makes a happy class. Cheerfulness is magnetic. The quality of courage and hope, ringing in every tone of the teacher's voice, awakens energy and ardor in the hearts of the pupils. The secret of the happy heart is in keeping near the Master. Christ in the heart a constant guest, can it help blessing? Christ holding the hand, Christ making the path, Christ leading the disciple, can there be room for melancholy? Can troubles press heavily that are day by day and night by night rolled into the open sepulchre beside the risen Redeemer, alas! we forget to pray. Our prayers degenerate into forms of words. Our Bibles gather dust. Our faith burns low. Our love becomes cold—our zeal, alas! either could not be, but lukewarm, and hateful to the Master. And we wonder that we cannot be happy! There is no happiness possible for the Christian except in the shadow of the mercy seat. The lamps must be trimmed every day, or they will go out in hours slumber and obscurity. Let us pray so be more than ever cheerful, that so we may be more than ever successful in our vocation. Winners of souls "shine evermore."

THERE IS TIME OF TRIAL.—When a room is filled with light, we see every object in it—know their place and purpose; when the light is withdrawn we know they are still there, but then the darkness veils the vessel that is to be used, and we are afraid to trust that to the dark—cannot believe that He in whom there is no darkness at all can see in the night as in the day. His comforts are withdrawn. When all is bright around us, it is easy to thank God and call upon the name of the Lord; but to have a spiritual, heart-felt song in the darkness, there will arise the cry of Jacob that He who was ever near to God in all his wanderings, and who has been the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, will be the God of Israel.

When any clergyman vacillates! When they are kept on hand.
