JOSIAH TURNER, Jr., EDITOR.

KIRK.

BIOGRAPHY OF THE COMMANDER OF HOLDER'S NORTH CAROLINA ARMY—THE MAN THE PRESIDENT IS BACKING.

[From the New York World.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WORLD.

SIR: Much has been said by the press in regard to the state of affairs in North Carolina, but no one can have any idea of the condition of the citizens without being acquainted with the antecedents of Colonel George W. Kirk, commander of the State troops.

At the outbreak of the war, the Kirks espoused the Union cause, and finally fled to the mountains of East Tennessee, and commenced a guerilla warfare on their own hook. Immediate death was meted out to all rebels or personal enemies who chanced to fall into Captain Kirk's clutches. Hearing of General Burnside's approach, Kirk assembled his mountaineers, and reported. General Burnside authorized a member of his staff and Kirk to raise a regiment to be known as the Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry. A battalion was raised, and Captain Smith, of the Fifth Indiana Cavalry, was appointed lieutenant colonel commanding, and Kirk captain of A company. This turn of affairs displeased Kirk, and he soon went back to his old guerrilla kind of warfare, serving as a guide, and soon had about two hundred men assembled in Knoxville, Tenn., when he was authorized to raise a regiment to be known as the Third North Carolina Mounted Infantry. During the time he was recruiting he made several excursions into North Carolina, but finally the general commanding the district of East Tennessee refused to allow him to go out of the lines attended by any force as so many reports came in of lynching, robbing and general misdeeds committed by him and his men, not only outside but also within our lines. Colonel Kirk's regiment being nearly full, and having been without pay for some time, an attempt was made to muster them into the service of the United States; but it took a long time to do it, as scarce a man could write his name, and the Colonel could hardly do any better. After the muster was effected the regiment made several forays, which were eminently successful in committing outrages on the citizens, but of little else. Col. Kirk never kept a decent camp, or had his men under discipline or drill.—At one time the regiment went on an expedition with General Ammen and General Gillem towards the Watauga river, when the following incident occurred, which fully illustrates the character of Kirk and most of his men: About nightfall the whole force came to camp, and the Third North Carolina were near a farm house occupied by an old man and his daughter-in-law, who was enciente. The old man's son was in the Southern army, and some of Kirk's men had an old grudge against him. In they went, forced this sick woman to cook their supper for them, and after they had eaten nearly all the provisions there was in the house, they carried away the remainder and also all the wearing apparel, both male, female, and infant's. Returning, they took all the crockery, the cradle and bedsteads, and with their sabres cut open the beds and scattered the contents throughout the house and yard. Not a pane of glass, not an ear of corn, not a mouthful to eat or a rag to protect from the cold weather was left the old man and his daughter. Colonel Kirk was ordered to make an examination and report the men who did the damage under arrest. He never could find them—on the contrary, tried to extenuate their conduct by saying "it was just the way to serve rebels."

This is but one of many instances of barbarity, and it might be said murder (for it was soon followed by the death of both the father and his daughter and new born babe,) which could be related. Such is the character of the ignorant, drunken, cruel Commander-in-Chief Kirk, who is intrusted with the execution of the mandates of Governor Holden in resisting the execution of the civil law of the land and the decision of the courts.

A FRENCH VIVANDIERE.

A correspondent of the London Telegraph, writing from Paris, thus describes a French vivandiere:

Yesterday, as a regiment of the line was marching through the Faubourg St. Antoine, the crowd espied the vivandiere bringing up the rear of the battalion in a vehicle remarkably like a washer-woman's cart—the chubby horse attached to which she was driving with her own fair hands, which were as brown as berries. The cart was as full as a steward's cabin on board a steam packet with good things, from Lyons sausages to Cognac brandy, from sardines to kirschwasser. There are not many florists' shops in the Faubourg St. Antoine; but in the twinkling of an eye the crowd began to pelt the little woman in the cart with bouquets, and great hulking fellows in blouses came forward to the shafts to pat the horse and shake the vivandiere's hand. She took off her little glazed hat—a man of war's man's hat, with a broad brim and a low crown, decked with tri-colored ribbons, and beneath which, I grieve, for the sake of the picturesque, to say that she wore a mob cap—and cried out, "Vive l'Empereur! vive la France!" in a voice so gruff that it would have done honor to a drum major. A kindly hearted little woman this, for in the front of the cart were at least seventy knapsacks which she was carrying for the rank and file—probably her regimental pets. A gallant little woman, assuredly, and with a stirring history of her own, perhaps. Her grandmother marched into Grand Cairo, and when the battle day was done administered comfort from her brandy keg to those who lay fainting in the Pyramid. Her mother marched into Madrid, into Rome, into Vienna, into Berlin. She kindled her short pipe from the smoking embers of the Kremlin, and was bayonetted by a Prussian in the bloody fight from Waterloo; and the vivandiere herself has been at the Malakoff, at Magenta, at Solferino, at Puebla. I fancy that I saw her there, with her brown face and twinkling black eyes, driving her little wain as cheerily as now. Why not? Who dies not remember Beranger's stirring refrain, "Ma-ma-plan, plan, plan! Soldats, voila Catin!" And Catin, the canteniere, is the only woman, I take it, who is not out of place on a battle-field.

The individual who was hanging in suspense was a horse-thief.
