NICKAJACK CAVE—A TENNESSEE WONDER.

One of the most remarkable curiosities in the West is an immense cave about twenty miles from Chattanooga. It is called Nickajack Cave, that name being a part of romantic corruption of the original "Nigger Jack's Cave." A correspondent of a Cincinnati paper gives the following description of it:

The cave is probably the largest in the State, and to explore it for even but a short distance is enough to satisfy one that it is "grand, gloomy and peculiar." Its mouth is about one hundred feet wide, and near forty feet high. It is arched overhead with pure granite, which presents a pure surface some fifteen feet high. The first two hundred feet of the cave is a large room arched overhead, and a portion of it having a smooth floor of dirt. It has a very popular place for balls, picnics and Fourth of July assemblages, the temperature always being delightful.

Out from the mouth of the cave runs a large stream of water clear as crystal. At the mouth the stream runs along one side; but further in the cave is contracted to the exact width of the stream. This occurs some two or three miles from the mouth, and thence onward the tourist has to go in a canoe, if he goes at all. Few care to go further, and the most daring has only been six miles. No man has ever found the end.

Tradition tells of a large number of interesting and horrible affairs connected with this cave. Dead men, and dead men's bones, have been found in its gloomy recesses. During the war, and after the fall of Nashville, Cheatham's command encamped on the bank of the river near the cave for a few days. Shortly afterwards the country was occupied by the Federal army, and a regiment of Indians troops encamped at the same place. A few of them were one day exploring the cave, and when some two miles from the mouth they stumbled over the bones of three men. It was a Rebel lieutenant and two privates. They were locked in each other's arms, and it is supposed they had lost their lights and wandered around in the ink black darkness until exhausted, and then lay down to die. If I mistake not, those who found them belonged to the 72nd Indiana mounted infantry.

About a year after this six or seven soldiers equipped themselves to explore the cave. They went in one morning and have never been heard of since. But their absence is now accounted for upon a hypothesis other than they were lost. At the time a vigorous search was made, but no traces found, and it was supposed they had become bewildered in the many labyrinths of the cavern, and never been able to find their way out. But now it is believed they remained in the cave until night, and then slipped out and deserted. Such a course would almost insure their escape, as their officers would believe them to be lost in the cave, and, of course, look nowhere else for them. At all events the mystery has never been cleared up, and people living about the cave aver that unless the soldiers had recourse to the stratagem to desert they were lost, and their bodies may be found in the cave.

A SPLENDID DESCRIPTION

On a certain occasion one Paul Denton, a Methodist preacher in Texas, advertised a barbecue with better liquor than is usually furnished. When the people assembled, a desperado in the crowd cried out, "Mr. Paul Denton, your reverence has lied. You promised not only a good barbecue, but better liquor. Where's the liquor?"

"There!" answered the missionary, in tones of thunder, and pointing his finger at the merciless double spring pushing up in two columns, with a sound like a shout of joy, from the bosom of the earth. "There," he repeated, with a look as terrible as lightning, while his enemy actually trembled at his feet, "There is the liquor which God, the Eternal, brews for his children! Not in the sweltering still over fires of hell, with poisonous gases and surrounded with the stench and sickening odor of corruption does our Father in Heaven prepare the precious essence of life—pure water. But in the glade and grassy dell, where the red deer wander and the child loves to play, there God brews it; and down in the deepest valleys, where the fountains murmur, and the rills sing; and high up in the mountain tops, where the granite glitters like gold in the sun, where the storm clouds brood and the summer storms crash; and out on the wide, wide sea, where the hurricane howls music and the big waves roll chords, swinging the march of God—there he brews it—the beverage of life, health-giving water.—And everywhere it is a thing of beauty; gleaming in the dewdrop, singing in the summer rain, shining in the ice gems till they seem turned to living jewels; spreading a golden veil over the setting sun, or a white gauze around the midnight moon; sporting in the cascade, sleeping in the glacier, dancing in the hail shower, folding its bright curtains softly around the misty world; and weaving the many colored iris, that seraphic sign of air, whose warp is the rain drops of earth, checkered over with celestial powers, the mystic hand of Deity—that blessed life water! no poison bubbles on its brink, its foam brings no madness and murder; no blood stains its liquid glass; pale widows and starving children weep no burning tears in its depths! Speak out my friends, would you exchange it for the demon's drink, alcohol?"

A shout like the roar of a tempest answered "No!"

A youth was lamenting to his father the ordeal of popping the question. "Boots," said the parent, "how do you suppose I managed to get my self-control, when I asked the young Bristol; 'would you have me, or shall I go and drown myself?'"
