JOSIAH TURNER, JR., EDITOR.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

To the People of North Carolina:

At a recent session of the State Council of the Friends of Temperance, I had the honor of being chosen President of that body.

As such, I feel it my duty to address the people at large, throughout the State, in behalf of Temperance. I count it a high privilege to be thus permitted to speak to the people of North Carolina on this important subject; and I do so, with the earnest hope, that all who may chance to read this may give this matter their attentive consideration, not only for their own good, but for the good of others. I feel sure that all lovers of temperance, sobriety and good morals, all who desire to see the great and growing evil of intemperance rooted out from our land, and all those who are disposed to aid in forwarding a great and good work, will either enlist under our banners, or give us their countenance, and lend us their assistance in advancing our cause.

The cause of temperance is an important one, and I may add, a flourishing one. It has been but a few years since the first temperance society was organized in the United States. About thirty years ago a few men who had been leading lives of intemperance, in the city of Baltimore, became conscious of the ruinous and degrading effects of their course, and determined to leave off drinking intoxicating liquors. To sustain and encourage each other in this resolution to abstain from strong drink, they formed themselves into an organized body. This was the nucleus around which many other societies were rapidly formed. Societies and orders, and Councils were rapidly organized, not only in other parts of Maryland, but in the adjoining States, and the originators of the movement averred themselves in the cause with most humane and laudable zeal.

They met with favor and encouragement in every community where they sought to establish their order. Numbers of men, young and old, paused in their downward careers of drunkenness, and joined the swelling ranks of the Sons of Temperance. The wives and mothers of dissipated men showered blessings upon the good men who had reclaimed their sons and husbands from the ruinous lives they were leading. Thousands of intemperate men, from the social wine bibber to the common street drunkard, were induced "to take the pledge," and become sober, temperate citizens. Thousands of anxious hearts were relieved of their anxiety, and thousands of distressed women were made to rejoice and be glad, because those whom they loved were rescued from ruin, reclaimed, and restored to the bosom of their families, new-made men, and this in a short time, the leaders in the movement had the proud satisfaction of seeing their noble efforts crowned with most gratifying success, in spite of the mean and despicable attempts of wicked, intemperate men to baffle them by ridicule and abuse, and even by open opposition.

The Order of the Friends of Temperance is the offspring of that movement.

In the year 1865 a few temperance men most of whom had been members of other organizations before and during the war, met in the city of Petersburg, to consult as to the best means to be employed in staying the terrible ravages which the demon—intemperance—was making among a people just emerging from the ruins of a four years' civil war. That consultation resulted in the formation of a new Order, and on the 29th day of November, 1865, they flung to the breeze the banner of the "Friends of Temperance," on which was inscribed the motto of Faith, Temperance, Charity; and Petersburg Council, No. 1, beamed out like a single star in a firmament of darkness to cheer and to save the fallen. Only five years have passed and instead of but a single star, Virginia has a hundred and twenty-six Councils, each a shining light in the moral firmament; North Carolina ninety-four, Texas ninety-two, Mississippi twelve, and Tennessee as many, while in almost every other Southern State the clouds of intemperance are breaking away, and the little stars of Faith, Temperance and Charity are beaming out to gladden the hearts of those whose lives have been saddened by intemperance.

Within the last two or three years our numbers have increased far beyond the most sanguine expectations of those who have been interested in its success.

The future is bright with promise. We are inspired with the hope that the day is not afar, when the cause of temperance will have its earnest supporters in every county within the borders of our State, when every town and village throughout the length and breadth of our land will have its Council, and a temperance hall will be erected in every place that is cursed with a bar room—when the reeling drunkard will be rarely seen on our streets, and delirium tremens, that most dreadful of diseases, will find but few victims in North Carolina—when our numbers will be "legion," and the number of our enemies will have dwindled to "a corporal's guard." Such is our hope—a blossoming hope—that it is our confident expectation, will soon ripen into a glorious reality!—Such a consummation, "so devoutly to be wished for," we most assuredly have every reason to expect, in course of time. We are stimulated to renewed exertion by our success in the past. The good that we have already accomplished gives us the full assurance that we may do yet more in the future. The successful results of our efforts are visible in every locality, where we have established a Council. The good effects of our work may be traced in every village, or town, or city, where our banner has been planted. It will be found, upon examination, that wherever our Order has been established, the number of the intemperate and drunken has steadily and perceptibly diminished, that many young men who were leading wild, reckless, dissipated lives, have been induced to forsake their ruinous course, and joining our ranks, have become sober and temperate. Others have been withdrawn from temptation by becoming members of our society; and in this way, many who would otherwise perhaps, have fallen into habits of intemperance have been thus prevented from doing so. Not only the young, but aged, hoary-headed inebriates have been rescued from their abominable, wicked courses, and restored to their families, reformed steady men—thus making glad the hearts of those who were dependent upon them.

But, besides the actual good that is accomplished, the influence of the example set by the members of our society is most wholesome in its effects upon others. It not only forms an inducement to the intemperate to reform their evils and abandon their sinful, degrading habits, but it has a restraining effect upon those who may be disposed to indulge in intoxicating drinks, or plunge into a course of reckless dissipation.

Ours is a noble work—that of reclaiming men from drunkenness.

The cause of temperance ranks second only to the work of spreading the Gospel of Christ and preaching the Word of God, for it has for its object the extirpation of the evil of intemperance, which is one of the worst evils of society. It prevails to an alarming extent in almost every country under the sun. In every christian land the frightful monster may be seen gathering in by thousands and tens of thousands his trembling victims, and darkening many a bright fireside with sorrow and misery, with ruin and desolation and death. It has its fearful ravages among all classes of society. Among the high and the low, among the rich and the poor, among princes and beggars, may be found the lovers of intoxicating drinks. In homes for inebriates—in asylums for the lunatic—in poor houses—in work houses—in common jails—in prisons—in reformatories, and in penitentiaries, may be seen the victims of drunkenness, and to such places we may go to learn the sad and baneful effects, and the fatal consequences of intemperance. Half the crimes that men commit have their origin in excitement caused by intoxicating drinks. Half of the diseases that afflict mankind may be traced to the bottle. The evils that follow on the heels of drunkenness are almost innumerable. But more than this, intemperance is a sin against the laws of God. It is contrary to the teachings of Christ, and violates the precepts of the Gospel. It is in direct conflict with the spirit of christianity. It is destructive of good morals. It is death to piety, and virtue finds no congenial home in the breast of the drunkard. It is ruinous, and blasting in its effects, both to mind and body—to soul and intellect. It wholly unfits a man for the performance of his social duties, it strips him of his reason, and drags him down to the level of the beasts of the field. The drunkard is a shame to himself, a disgrace to his family, an annoyance to his friends, an eye-sore to the community in which he may chance to live, a reproach to his country, and a vile sinner against his God. Intemperance destroys all peace and tranquility of mind. It is blighting and blasting to the happiness of man. It entails upon a man untold miseries, and evils innumerable. Home, where all the virtues are fostered, where the most of our enjoyments cluster, where our affections are centered and our true happiness is only to be found, becomes a hell when a drunken father, or reeling husband crosses its threshold! It becomes a miserable abode, a very prison-house to the drunkard's wretched wife and unfortunate children. What a prolific, never failing source of grief, and misery, and wretchedness, and frequently is it the cause of sickness and disease, madness and insanity, poverty and degradation, ruin and death! We cannot go amiss in any part of our land to find the dread effects of drunkenness. We see it every day in red eyes and bloated faces, and trembling limbs, in broken constitutions, and ruined minds, and wrecked fortunes! We mark it in the worn, haggard faces of wretched women whose husbands are drunkards. We see it in the pale faces of half-fed, half-clothed children, whose unfortunate fathers spend their substance in bar-rooms and drinking saloons. Hundreds and thousands around us are daily tottering to their fall—a fall dreadful to contemplate—a fall to their ruin of poverty and wretchedness; and more than that, a fall of entailless to eternal and everlasting damnation.

We may see the young man just entering upon his career in life, with bright hopes and high expectations, but suddenly forsaking the ways of virtue, and recklessly betaking himself to the bottle, day after day, until he falls by the wayside—a wreck of what he was—mind ruined—prospect gone—happiness blighted—a most lamentable object to behold! But a still more pitiable sight is to see the old man, who has nearly "marched his journey's end," still clinging to the bottle, like an infatuated fool, as he is, hanging around bar-rooms, wasting his substance, spending his money, destroying the happiness of his family, and finally, with bloodshot eye and emaciated body, all foul with disease rolling on the bed of death, wild with delirium! Thousands upon thousands are daily drinking damnation to themselves, and countless numbers fill the drunkard's grave. A voice so great an evil so dreadful in its consequences, and so fearful in extent, ought to be extirpated—rooted out entirely from society. This entire extirpation can, perhaps, be hoped for, but it is in our power to check in some measure, the alarming spread of intemperance, and diminish the number of the drunken and the dissipated, by reclaiming those who are addicted to strong drink, and restraining others from entering upon such a course, by the exercise of our influence, and by setting examples of sobriety and temperance to the community at large.

This is the object of our society. The work demands the reasonable efforts not only of every lover of the cause of temperance, but of all those benevolent individuals who are disposed to exert themselves in behalf of humanity; especially does the work commend itself to the attention of all Christians in our land, and is deserving of all the assistance they can lend to it. To forward our object and bring to our work a greater measure of success, I would appeal to those men who are leading lives of intemperance and drunkenness, and debauchery, to pause in their pernicious course, to reflect upon its sinfulness—to consider its madness, its absolute folly—to consider how ruinous it is—what a curse to themselves and their families—what a source of sickness and disease, of misery and wretchedness—how degrading in its effects—how blasting in its consequences—and to consider not only the evils of intemperance, but also to think of the many blessings that flow from habits of temperance and sobriety—to think of the peace and tranquility of mind, and the domestic happiness it is sure to bring. I would call upon them to think over all these things calmly, deliberately and dispassionately, and to do as their conscience must bid them, leave off drinking intoxicating liquors, and keep away from bar rooms, and in order "to make assurance doubly sure," enlist under our banners and subscribe to our pledge.

I would appeal to those men who are still pursuing the paths of virtue and sobriety—men who have too much good sense and self-respect, and tender regard for their families and friends to degrade themselves by intemperance and drunkenness—to them I would call to join our ranks, if not to work in our cause, at least for the purpose of setting a good example to others, and swelling our numbers, and thus increasing our influence for good.

I would appeal to the influential men in every part of our State, to assist us in our work, either to become active or honorary members of our society, or by exerting the influence they may wield over others, to induce them to become members of our organization. They could not engage in a better work. They could not speak in a more laudable cause.

Not only to the men, but to women I would appeal, who are ever ready to engage in any work, which has for its object the alleviation of suffering, or the rooting out of any vice or immorality that may exist among us. I would call upon them to encourage us in our work, by their favorable countenance and to do more, to join our Councils, and to use their influence to induce their husbands, and sons, and fathers, and brothers, to become members of our society. The women, above all others on earth, are most deeply interested in the success of the cause in which we are engaged. It is the gentle, pure women of our land—the mothers, the wives, and the daughters, who suffer most from men's indulgence in strong drink. Those women who are so unfortunate as to have drunken husbands or intemperate fathers, or dissipated sons, know the hateful effects of drunkenness; and many of them have, no doubt, had to witness the beastly behavior of a drunken father, or endure, in silence and in secret, the disgusting brutalities of a selfish husband. The comfort and happiness of the fair sex must increase in exact proportion with the success of the cause of temperance. There exists then, the most powerful motives for their enrolling their names in our lists, and exerting their influence on all those who come within their sphere of life to do the same.

And especially, to the ministers and clergy, and preachers of God's Word, without distinction, as regards denomination, sect or persuasion, would I call to join our Councils, and exert themselves in behalf of our cause. Christianity and temperance are closely allied. They go hand in hand. The one cannot thrive without the other—for temperance and sobriety are corner stones in the character of the christian. Piety and intemperance cannot exist together. Piety is a mockery, unless it be founded on sobriety. Temperance must spread with the spread of christianity. The one is, in the very nature of things, co-extensive with the other. Our work, therefore, demands the attention, and is deserving of the aid and countenance, of all who are engaged in the work of christianity. We live in an age of progress—great and rapid progress in all the various departments of human agency and human activity. Knowledge is spreading with wonderful swiftness throughout the world, and civilization is advancing with giant strides. It is an age of intense activity—and that individual or that society which fails to display zeal and energy in the accomplishment of the object in view, is soon left far in the lurch.

Let those, then, who are interested in the cause of temperance, which is the cause of morality, and closely linked to that of religion, make every exertion in their power to push forward the laudable work, and keep pace with the progress and advancement which characterizes the age. Let all those who favor the cause, or desire to follow in the paths of temperance and sobriety, enlist under our banners, and join the "Army of Temperance!"

WE see a great deal in the papers about the coming exhibition of Col. Simon Hayes' New Circus, &c. When it does come, it will no doubt be a grand affair, for the Colonel is some in his role and ways, and does a great many funny things. Besides all this the Colonel is the best looking man in town, which is accountable for from the fact that he is a pat.on of PINK C. HARDIE.

Now let me say a word or two about my own exhibition. I have on exhibition the finest stock of Cigars in the State, and at the lowest prices.

I have on exhibition the largest and best assorted stock of Smoking Tobacco in the State.

I have on exhibition the finest stock of Chewing Tobacco in the City.

Also, Pipes of all kinds. I am daily expecting the celebrated Sully Mitchell one dozen Pipes. Everybody knows these goods, therefore, it is needless for me to puff them here.
