These very virtues have brought upon them the wrath of those who have sought to degrade our Southern people to their own level. Her citizens have been and are being persecuted with a fiendish malice which has not and will not humble their noble spirit. The slanders of a judge, the petty malice of the United States Marshal and commissioners and States harden and commences and their worthless deputies cannot frighten them. Their honorable pride and good name are above the blandishments, is they are unawed by the threats of power. How well he performed his duties the no-torious fact that the Adjutant-General's office was the most systematic and best managed at the Confiderate capitol at-tests. For this the United States governare unawed by the threats of power.
