How, How and Whelan, Assembly in Church.—Some years ago a very disagreeable scene occurred in one of the colored churches of this city. The principal actors were Friday Jones and Rev. Warwick, both colored. Friday and his wife of the church wanted to use the building for a school house. This was objected to Friday took forcible possession of the church. For this he was arraigned before the court. The deed for the property was proposed to show that the church could not be used for a school. Friday remained the last and looks for the door, pursued by the congregation generally. Those who attempted to obstruct Friday in his quest were overcome by Friday and his son. The police intervened and all hands arrested and held in court for an arraignment. Friday at the last term of the court, obtained a writ of habeas corpus which required the officers. At the present term the warrant for Friday was returned and he was arraigned before the court. The Judge charged the jury to find Friday guilty of forcible possession of the church and to award damages. Friday was acquitted.

MARY'S COURT, Jan. 11, 1878.—Officer Paris arrested Champion Mason for a forcible trespass on the lands of Mrs. Margaret B. Marshall.

Champion on being arraigned, pleaded in the following eloquent style: "Mr. Mayor, you get me in jail for stealing a fellow that steal! God made the land and the trees. He made those for all mankind. I had no wood, and I went to get some—don't say any more to me, for the trees was doing nobody no good, and I wanted some wood."

The Mayor informed Champion that he would be compelled to send him on to City Jail for further arraignment, as to the plea of the defendant it was a fact that the defendant had made trespass and had for the same.

Champion changed the plea, and pleaded that he was not guilty, and when he heard from, he was arraigned before the court.

ASSASSINATION. The President of Bolivia shot by his nephew—Details of the tragedy.—A new Government chosen.

Gen. Augustine Morales, the President of Bolivia, was murdered in La Paz, on the 27th of November last, in a private quarrel with his own nephew, Commandeur de La Paze, of the Bolivian army. It is said that for some weeks Morales had been on bad terms with the Bolivian Congress, the misunderstanding growing out of decided opposition on the part of the Legislature to the designs of narcotics respecting the Altiago silver mines which had long been covered by the President and which estate he wished to be confiscated for the benefit of the nation. The Assembly, however, refused to listen to the project of the executive, clearly perceiving the ulterior designs of General Morales. From this circumstance an open rupture was fomented between the two opposing parties.

On the 24th of November the President was banqueted in the palace, celebrating the second anniversary of the overthrow of Napoleon, his deadly foe. The furious character of the man was excited to almost to madness by the recollection of his victory and by the capricious libellous attacks in memory of the event, reflecting from the table he staggered in the building occupied by Congress, that moment in session, and meeting some of the Senators in the lobby, commenced assaulting them with threats and vile abuse for their persistency in thwarting his plans. Fortunately, he was persuaded, on some pretext or other, to withdraw from the scene, and he returned still breathing threats of future vengeance.

The members of Congress were naturally enough alarmed at this aspect of affairs, and the session was suspended, and the next day several in memory of his defeat, and on the evening of the 27th of November a letter was brought to his own apartment by one of his aides, which informed the President that that very night his aides proposed to bind him and place him in a secure prison. The letter bore no signature. Morales, however, suspected several of his aides, when his nephew and aide, Commander de La Paze, reconstrued with him, pointing out the fact that he was maintaining the only guards remaining to him. Upper La Paze Morder three times and striking him twice before he had time to escape and retreat. He was thrown in the arms of his daughter, he breathed his last. La Paze instantly proceeded to his barracks, threw over the command to his aides, and before the story of the murder was made public had fled from the city.

On the next morning the late of the president was not known, and then Congress was hastily assembled, and the Government of the State with Don Tomas Price as the chief, naming the government as chief of the destinies of Bolivia, according to the stipulations of the constitution. The second Morales by mistake for the temporary period, and was then buried with customary honors and his rank.

MEASURING THE BABY.

We measured the previous baby Against the cottage wall— A lily grew up at the threshold, And the baby was just as tall As a royal lily.

With spotted purple and gold, A d'hears like a jeweled chalice The fragrant dew to hold.

Without the blue bird whistled High up in the old roof trees, And to and fro at the window The rose tickled her nose.

And to see pink feet of the baby Were never a moment still, Scatching at white and shadow That danced on the lattice will.

His eyes were as white as blue bells— His mouth like a flower unfurls— Two little bare feet like fluffy white mice Poked out from his sunny gowns, And he looked, with a thill of rapture, That yet had a touch of pain, When June roses rolled with her roses, We'll measure the boy again.

Ah me! In a darkened chamber, With the sunshine shut away, Through tears that fell like bitter rain, With the light of heaven there— And the little bare feet were dimpled, And sweet as a budding rose, Lay side by side together, In the hush of long repose.

Upon the dainty pillow, While as the risen dawn, The first light, like smiling, With the light of heaven there— And the dear little hands the rose leaves Drooped from a rose, lay still, Never to reach at the cushioning That crept to the drowsed still.

We measured it a sleeping baby, With ribbons white as snow, For the shining rosewood casket That waited him below; And out of the darkened chamber We went with a childless mean— To the light of the shining angels Our little one lay below.

GREY ENTERPRISE.—There is a smart family up town. It consists of a father, mother and several children. Before Christmas the old folks—upon the following shrewd plan: Select the families of friends in which there was but a single child, a handsome present was purchased and sent to it a day in advance in the name of the seven youngsters of the scheming family. Of course this implied reciprocity on the part of the old folks, who owned the single juvenile. It would not do to send one present for seven gift makers, neither would it be appropriate to send one less costly or elegant than that received. There being no other alternative than to reciprocate the compliment to all in kind, the father of the lone youngster, with a heavy heart, dispatches seven presents, each in value equal to the one his darling was favored with, and thus by a little shrewd management, the paternal ancestors of the seven olive branches reaped a seven-fold dividend from their thoughtful investment. Verily, verily, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and after many days it shall return unto thee."—Philadelphia Star.

TALK ABOUT TONICS. The object of a tonic is to increase the vitality and strength of the muscular force, and to invigorate the general system. As a means of accomplishing these objects, a tonic should improve the appetite and the digestive power of the stomach. These are certainly important considerations, for in every disease, it is the digestive power that is most injured, and the restoration of this power is the first step towards recovery. It is therefore, of the utmost importance that the patient should use a tonic that will improve the digestive power, and increase the vitality of the system.

DR. J. W. WALKER'S TONIC. This is a powerful tonic, and is of the utmost importance in every disease. It will improve the appetite, increase the digestive power, and invigorate the general system. It is of the utmost importance that the patient should use a tonic that will improve the digestive power, and increase the vitality of the system.
