

THE SENTINEL.

JOSIAH TURNER, Jr., T. B. KINGSBURY, Associate Editor.

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 27, 1873.

MISS SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

We do not like oppression. We are opposed to it on principle. Whether it be potentate or tyrant mob; whether it be a despotism or republic that deals the blow, we are against it.

The case of Miss Anthony is a very remarkable one. She is a strong minded Northern woman. She believed she had a right to vote under the sanction of the Constitution that had been so changed that the very men who made it would not probably recognize their own creation.

AMERICAN DICTIONARIES.

We have had occasion more than once to express our preference for Worcester to Webster. We have never entered into any discussion to show the reasons for that preference.

"The preservation of the orthography and etymology of words is highly essential to the purity of a language, and while it is true that new words are constantly introduced to give expression to new phases of thought, no lexicographer is faithful to his subject who fails to recognize the proper derivation of words, or gives definitions totally at variance with the original roots, and above all he should never permit local or political personal opinions to enter into a work of this purely philological character as a dictionary."

He then shows how Webster's is prostituted to political ends. He gives an example: "Dr. Webster, in his original, gives the definition of the word 'State' as, 'more usually the word signifies a political body, governed by representatives; a community with a certain territory, which are recognized by the best scholars as correct, without regard to whether it meets the approbation of partisans or not.'

It is the word that Webster applies to the Southern people: It is Yankee all over. Worcester is recommended by the State Boards of Education of Virginia, Alabama, Arkansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and North Carolina.

We have an article in our portfolio that we must give us along with the political bias of Webster. Our opposition to Webster is placed however upon other grounds.

The subject of an international standard of currency is being discussed in Europe. A general conference of the Germanic States is to be held in Vienna, in September to consider the matter.

REMARKS OF REV. P. A. STROBEL.

At the Inauguration of the Orphan Asylum at Oxford, on Tuesday, June 24th.

On being introduced by the Grand Master of the Lodge, Mr. Strobel said in substance: "I feel highly gratified and surprised by being called upon without any previous notice, to address so large and intelligent an audience. He was present only as a spectator, and designed by his presence to give expression to the deep interest which he felt in an institution designed for such benevolent and truly praiseworthy objects."

Yet as a necessity seemed to be laid upon him, he would endeavor to contribute something to the interest of the occasion. He had been introduced to the Superintendent of the American Bible Society, for N. C., and he was gratified at having the opportunity to claim the charitable institution which they were now formally inaugurating as one of the natural fruits of that blessed system of doctrine taught in the sacred Scriptures.

In this very mercenary and practical age, the question was asked in reference to every measure. "Will it pay?" Will it pay to establish an asylum for the hundreds of orphans in our State, who are friendless and without homes, and over whose young hearts so many chords of sorrow and sadness have gathered? The speaker maintained that to work like the one which we were inaugurating to-day, does pay in every aspect in which it can be considered. It pays richly in its physical aspect. It is a great work, a blessed work to gather these little ones into a spacious and airy building like this, to substitute for their ragged, worn and comfortable clothing, to give them plentiful supplies of good wholesome food, to surround them with happy christian home influences, to free them from excessive toil, to remove from their young hearts all anxieties about their daily bread, and amidst these grand old forest trees, invite them to healthy exercise and to breath nature's sweetest zephyrs with light and happy spirits.

But this institution contemplates a higher end. Its inmates are not only to be led and clothed and enjoy physical culture, their minds are to be properly improved. Here they will enjoy a system of thorough and practical education, fitting them for such positions as God in his providence may open to them. It would be insulting to the intelligence of this audience to enquire, does it pay to educate these children? I especially enquire of the fathers! Often in some humble log cabin, had been found some bright mental jewel, which needed only to be brought from its obscurity and properly nurtured to develop its beauty and its brilliance and the speaker would not be surprised if amongst the pupils already gathered into this institution, there should be found some pupils of rare intellectual endowments, who in future years would prove an honor and a glory to the State and a blessing to society.

It is the word that Webster applies to the Southern people: It is Yankee all over. Worcester is recommended by the State Boards of Education of Virginia, Alabama, Arkansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and North Carolina.

largest charity. Not only is it proposed for the physical comfort and the intellectual culture of these children, their higher, their nobler, their spiritual nature are to be nurtured, and while regard is to be had to the life that now is, they are to be trained with reference to the life that is yet to come.

Like this, to sustain this institution in view of the benefits which it brings to ourselves. There is always a reflex influence connected with every good deed which a man performs. The virtues which often lie dormant in our hearts are called into exercise by the circumstances which surround us. If we ever were called to minister to the wants of the needy—if the hungry were never fed by us and the thirsty given drink—if we never were called upon to clothe the naked, to succor the widow and fatherless, and to go to the house of mourning and of grief, we would be strangers to all those sublime sympathies which these ministrations to the needy and sorrowing kindle in our hearts.

It is twice blessed; it blesseth him that gives, and him that doth receive.

The speaker closed his address by an earnest appeal to all present to give to this Orphan Home, which he hoped soon to see the foster child of all christian people throughout the State, their warmest sympathies, their ardent prayers and their liberal contributions.
