His idea of nominating candidates for convention is a very good one : "I think, sir, the men who are hunting up the nomination are the very men who shouldn't get it, and should give it to some good met we who don't expect it." He is not prejudiced against lawyers, thinks there ought to be a few good ones in all legis-lation, but he made this point, which shows the people are beginning to think. Said he : "There's no use, sir, for so much talking, we want men who will do as and then go home. So the bu much talking is expensive and you and I have to pay for it. For instance a subject comes up to-day, say 200 members in the Legislature at $5 a day, that's a thousand a day, one man has with Rome. to make a long speech on the subject another feels he will not show his -talents unless he follows in another speech to be noticed in the papers, and then another, and another, until the question which could have been put through in little or no time, by men who mean ess for the country, and not fam for themselves, is maybe kept up whole week at the expense of seven and dollars to the voting people.
