DR. HOOE'S ADDRESS AT THE PEACE I STITUTE. - It is not perhaps too late to express our high approcia-tion of the rare intellectual treat en-joyed in the charming address of Rev. Dr. Hoge at Peace Institute on Wednesday morning last. Bis theme was happily announced after a playful introduction, as the fil-phabet, the Great Magician or the Ennts of Literature. With wise reference to the heat he discarded ponderous discussion on abstract subjects, and with delightful versatility and won-derial case he engaged and entranced his andience IIIs oratory was as refreshing as the play of zephyrs beneath the cool trees, and beside rippling brooks - a summer ldyh Beginning with an allasion to the oc-casion, and the announcement of dis-tinctions just made, some of which were tinctions just made, some of which were for the old fashioned accomplishments of reading and spelling he naturally led to the subject of hooks, the pleasured to the subject of hooks, the pleasured they afford and powers they possess With delicate playfulness and fresh sparkling humor he spoke of the pleas-nre afforded to the writer, - often un-shared ! - the pleasure to others of the pleasure to the reader And while he told of the brush of the painter and the

which has the double merit of be in the Confederate cemetery in Ralcredible and creditable. Lord Blank little time ago was the subject of a considerable scandal, which appears to have got abroad through a governess who resigned her position in his mansion (he was a widower,) and afterwards signed as her reason his lordship's mproper intimacy with one of his domestics. Just as these whispers began to circulate concerning the nobleman hose character had been spotless, his Lord Blank had fallen in love with his now dwalt in all her borders -- Nor her instruction, so, unconsciously giving rise to scandal; and that when the Corrected by F. C. CHRISTOPHERS, maid had learned as much as young ladies generally know (which she said was not nearly so hard as to get her H's right) he married her. Of course to the grand world in which this eccentric no-bleman moved the scandal had been only an annusing surprise; but the mar-riage with the parlor maid—that was shocking. However, this young dame had several characteristics to whose value people of fashion are not insensi-ble. First, she is one of the most beautiful women in London; secondly, ahe has a refined simplicity of manner; and, thirdly, she has a taste in dress which has already gained her a certain fame among artists. In short, the par-lor maid turns out to have had all the honors in her hand, and now, even immong those of the class to which her lord has introduced her, there is no more general favorite, as certainly there are none more piquant and attractive. —[London corres, Cincinnati Commer-cial. right) he married her. On his arrival at Charleston he was carried on board the Indian Charlest a large sailing vessel lying in the har-bor at the time. He was then sworn into the navy as a common sailor, and was compelled to hay around Fort Sinsp-ter every other night in a picket beat to keep off the enemy. After a while he was promoted to the position of cook. He was ordered to James Island, and there he cooked for two months when Charleston was evacuated by the confederate troops. He then obtained a furlough from Commodore Tucker and returned to his home. He gave an amusing account of his experience as cook. Shortly after his return General Lee surrendered and thus the war terminated. He said he was standin alone on the State capitol and any Sherman's army enter the city of Ral-eigh. He saw a Confederate cavalry fire at Gen. Kilpatrick who rode at the head of the army. Gen. Kilpatrick wa not hurt the man who fired the sh was immediately caught and hung in the city. with charming case and naturalness he led along the delightful paths of the literature of childhood and youth, and of maturer years, culling with dainty hand and exquisite taste most quaint and choice flowers from a wide field of literary research, and enriching a dis-course itself a gem of beauty with parkling jewels

The tribute to the Book of books was worthy of the reverend orator. The The power that wreathed the andience with smiles, looked with equal case, tears and earnest solemnity. The closing allusions to Prof. Stevens-to the "Further Shore" to which the mapired word alone led, to the parting now and the meeting then, were eloquent, simple ply impressive.

Dr. Hoge is an orator in every sense of the word ; of commanding appear ance, and courtly dignity of ma there is also an exceeding simplicitly and naturalness. His command of language was perfect, and the felicity with which allusions to passing events, and the transitions from playful to serious passages were made, was wonderful And when at times, rising with the dignity of the theme his voice would deepen and swell, and his attitude be one of more than his accustomed stateliness, it seemed the very acms of eloquence, the majestic triumph of oratory.

The audience comprised the m cultivated and literary society of the city. It is not too much to say that they were more than delighted—they were charmed and fascinated. The pontaneous and unexpected call u Dr. Hoge at night to which he so gra fully responded was a proof of it. Bal-eigh will always be glad to welcome Dr. Hoge.
