SUPREME COURT.—This Honorable Body adjourned to-day until next term. The last of the opinions were filed this afternoon. This Court have been a long and hard week this term, and will enjoy the relaxation of the vacation. The docket was heavy, and it was only by closest application and unremitting labors that the court has been able to finish by this time.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.—The September number of Lippincott's is full of brilliant attractions. The opening, illustrated paper, "Rose Undergood," by A. J. Veitch, will be found very interesting and amusing. Both in its writing and in the cuts illustrating the same. "Glimpses of Polynesia" is quite an entertaining bit of description, with seven handsome illustrations. This is followed by two charming stories or sketches, "A Tennis Tragedy," by Mrs. Frances Fuller Victor, and "How we have the first husband of Mrs. E. Lynn Linton's new romance, "The Atonement of Leam Dundas," the opening chapters of which are certainly very able, clear cut, and interesting, promising a better story than "Paddy Kendall," which has spoken of by the best English and American critics as, in many respects, equal to George Eliot's "Middle March," and Mrs. Linton is, without doubt, one of the leading novelists of the generation. Our readers should not fail to procure this number of Lippincott's Magazine.

THE SOUTHERN HOME AND FARM.—The first number of this new paper was issued on Saturday, and does credit to the hard work expended in getting the hands that executed it into the right shape. Neatly filled of practical reading matter, and illustrated with fine cuts of Ex-Gov. Graham, Gov. Brogden and Gen. Ferris. As to the scope and purpose of this paper, we quote from the salutatory of its Editor, H. T. Fulghum, Esq.:

"The chief purpose of publishing a Southern journal long felt and the demand for it has been frequently expressed by our friends. We propose to give to the people a weekly paper which will be an exponent of the interests of the South. It will be an illustrated journal of the times. It will treat of every subject pertinent, whether it be agriculture, horticulture, mechanics, or any and everything which is of interest to the people. We propose to give to the people a paper which will be a welcome visitor to the fireside, and which will be read by the whole family. We propose to make it interesting and instructive to the young as well as the old. We propose to make it a paper which will be worthy of the support of the people, and which will be a credit to the State. We propose to make it a paper which will be a welcome visitor to the fireside, and which will be read by the whole family. We propose to make it interesting and instructive to the young as well as the old. We propose to make it a paper which will be worthy of the support of the people, and which will be a credit to the State."

That we need is a higher and more exacting public morality, severer judgments upon lapses in honorable conduct, sharper condemnation, the elevation of the tone of business conduct, the private and official statesmanship, the elevation of the tone of business conduct, the private and official statesmanship, and the moral life of a man of a leading will in the church or in society who does not come with clean hands.—[New Albany Ledger (Democrat) (Dem.)

THE SELECTION.

Views of the press.

[For we are indebted.—With the selection of Governor of Alaska, North Carolina, some of the newspapers of the Commonwealth seem to have agreed with us. It is certainly unwise, that the convention will be divided among several factions, the Democratic and Republican. This is not to be a contest in the approaching election, but it will come when party lines are not drawn, and when all the people will be united in the choice of the best man for the office.]

[Wilmington Journal (Dem.)

The Democratic party of North Carolina has a right to expect that the Democratic party of the State will be united in the choice of the best man for the office.
