An occasional vigorous and animated runaway to a culver's eye streets. They greatly promote the practice of calisthenic exercises among our citizens. Why isn't some rigorous hitch-law enforced?

We had a visit yesterday from James Robinson and R. S. Hunkle, two dashing young cavaliers of Fayetteville, who were tickled amazingly at the selection of their old company as North Carolina's part of the centennial Legion of Honor.

W. A. Peaine, superintendent of construction on the government buildings in this city, who left here some time since in bad health, has returned much improved from a sojourn in Richmond under the care of Dr. McGill.

IMPORTANT MEETING.—Tax-payers of Raleigh, remember that a meeting will be held at Metropolitan hall, next Monday evening at half-past 7 o'clock, to consider the question of funding the city debt. Let every property-owner and taxpayer attend.

LEGION OF HONOR.—Napoleon's Old Guard dwindles to insignificance. The Prussian cohorts, the resistless Phalanx of Macedonia, the myriad hosts of "Ex-er-ex-es," all the legions and squads of history, poetry and romance, from the coasts of Egypt to the train-band of John Gilpin, fade into nothingness, beside the Legion of Honor which is to muster its deathless warriors at the Philadelphia centennial next year. It will be composed of the oldest military company or organization in each of the original thirteen states; each command will form the escort of the governor of its state; and they will rank in the legion in proportion to age.

LADIES, BEWARE.—As a Sentinel on the ramparts of Zion, we feel it our duty to issue a solemn and impressive note of warning to all the feminine readers and friends of this paper. Yesterday afternoon, four ruthless conspirators against the peace and single-blessedness of young womanhood, met at the fair grounds, and all happening to shake hands at once, formed a cross, which ever bodes a matrimonial crucifixion near at hand. A demonic smile passed round the plotting band, as they, then and there, all pledged themselves to realize the prophecy of the crucial omen, and be married men before the next year's fair calls youth and beauty, prize quilts, big beads and gay mule-eggs together. The members of this Cupidity-struck conclave are: Gov. C. H. Brogden, bachelor; Col. C. W. D. Hutchings, widower; Rev. N. M. Jurney, young and handsome bachelor; and Theo. N. Ramsay, bachelor and Good Templar state lecturer. Ladies, again we say, beware! There's trouble ahead. This cross-handed phalanx means business.

THIRTEEN TO MERIT.—After the adjournment of the great agricultural pow-wow and love-feast at the Capitol last evening, a strange meeting was held in the rotunda. On motion of R. W. Best, pro tem. reporter of the Sentinel, Capt. Evans, of the Vicksburg Herald, took the chair. On motion of the chairman, R. W. Best was unanimously elected secretary. The secretary introduced and read this resolution:

Resolved, that the grishing thanks of the Agricultural Society of North Carolina are due to R. W. Best, of the Daily Sentinel, for the full and able and impartial reports of the evening meetings of the society, and of each day's proceedings and incidents at the Fair Grounds, during the week.

Upon the third reading of the resolution, the chairman stated that, while it was not exactly the clean thing for a gentleman to introduce such resolute puffery of himself, still 99 1/100ths of all such work nowadays is directly traceable to the parties most interested, and this was only following the fashion. Besides, he remembered the scriptural declaration: "Blessed is he that tooteth his own fish-hook before him, as the hypocrites do; otherwise verily it shall not be tooteth." In consideration of these indisputable facts and authorities, he decided the resolution in order; and the yes, yeas and nays, being called for, it passed by a majority of two, amid great enthusiasm and a couple of cheers. After a vote of thanks to the chairman and secretary for the able manner in which they had discharged their arduous duties, the meeting adjourned, and Capt. Evans and Mr. Best put on their hats and walked home in all the pride of conscious rectitude.

THE STATE FAIR.

WINDING UP DAY—SMALL ITEMS. This has been the closing day of the fifteenth annual fair of the North Carolina Agricultural Association, and there can be no question of its having been a GRAND SUCCESS.

People were busy packing up and removing their articles, some radiantly smiling over premiums assured; and others less lucky, growling over the favoritism or unfairness that had dashed their calculations. The PREMIUM LISTS are in the hands of the revising committee and the full roll of awards will appear in the Sentinel at the earliest possible moment. Much credit is due the public-spirited LADY MANAGERS of Floral Hall, for their untiring zeal and devotion in decorating their department and keeping up the interest of visitors. They displayed exquisite taste in arranging the ten thousand incognituous articles entrusted to their charge, and made discordance beautiful. The committee was composed of Mrs. Jesse J. Yates, of Hartford; Mrs. Julia Lewis, Mrs. John G. Williams and Miss Blanche Ventress, of Raleigh; and Miss Camilla Inrie, of Pittsboro. The HANDSOMEST CAKE exhibited at the fair this year, and one we have never seen surpassed, was made, baked and ornamented by our fair townswoman, Mrs. Alex. Creed. In moving it, the ornaments were broken off and its appearance marred.—(N. B. This notice is not elicited, like the average journalistic puff, by the fact of our having eaten any of the cake. Nay, verily; we never eat cake, when we can't get it.)

Capt. T. A. Granger, the model farmer of Wayne county, had on exhibition 200 articles of his own raising, field, orchard and garden crops, one of the finest lots we ever saw. The tobacco exhibited by our old friend, E. P. Jones, of Greensboro, was as choice as the most fastidious weed-connoisseur could have asked. J. C. S. Lunsford, our live stove-man, had seven varieties of stoves of his own manufacture, and raked in thousands of premiums. There were ten thousand things we should have mentioned, but our limited space has prevented. The fair is over. The crowds have scattered. Peace and happiness attend all who have gone and all who stay, until we all meet again next year.

Dr. H. G. Logan and wife left Cleveland county last week, bound for Arkansas. A. W. Venable, of Granville, finds his health much improved by his trip to Buffalo springs. W. D. Rountree and family have returned to Wilson and will not return to Brooklyn. Dr. Westray Battle, of Edgecombe, has been appointed assistant-surgeon in the U. S. navy. A circus man, with a pair of brass knuckles, ruined an eye for a Charlotte ruralist named Maxwell. T. H. McFarrie, of Statesville, passed through Charlotte Tuesday, with a newly captured bride, Lett Miss Hattie McMillan, of New Hanover. When the young lawyer, Robert Norfleet, of Tarboro, accidentally shot himself, he exclaimed: "I know I am mortally wounded; let me see my dear mother before I die." Some Boston ladies have presented the ladies of the Tarboro Presbyterian church with a costly silver communion service. We might make a pointed observation here, but generously forbear. Rocky Mount christians are just now standing around with their hands in their trousers-pockets, reveling in the delights of a daily rough and tumble fight between Smith's bull-dog and A. P. Griffin's tumbler. At a darky military shin-dig in Wilmington, the other night, the high-colored exquisites objected to the prompter's call of "hand back"; and substituted, as more elegant, "advance a few paces backwards." Seventeen rats got into a barrel of peas in Tarboro, and furiously didn't let each other have peace. They fought like Killman rats, and the longest tail took the pile. In the morning, 16 were found dead, and the solitary victor and survivor badly crippled. Here's how he remembered Bill in his will. The Charlotte Observer says the will of Joseph L. Blackwood, dated April 4, 1863, contains this queer little evidence of remembrance: "I will to Wm. Boyles one barrel of whiskey, and I want my executors to purchase it and send it to him."

NEWS AND NOTES. Spain and the Vatican are carrying on a vigorous correspondence. We don't know Vatican all mean. Hayes' majority in Ohio has dwindled or expanded, according to which side's reports you first believed, to perhaps 4,000. Heavy gales are gayly sporting along the British coasts, and chucking eternity full of ancient mariners all swaddled in seaweed and dripping with brine. The race-track seats at Greenfield, Ohio, fell yesterday with 1,000 men, women and children, furnishing abundant employment for the surgeons and coroners. No successor yet to head-thief Delano, of the Interior department; and the pen of a dozen greedy applicants is: "Delano-t, Delano-t, oh, Ulysses, to turn some other scamp in for the one that's turned out." Best Butler lectured on finance in New York yesterday, and while he was at it, two business firms illustrated his argument by failing for lack of money; Herman & Co., woolen dealers, for $200,000, and Harris & Rothstein, hat-makers, for $37,000.

SENATOR BAYARD.

A SERENADE TO BE GIVEN HIM THIS EVENING—OUR MILITARY COMPANIES TO ESCORT HIM TO THE TRAIN.

A dispatch from Gen. Mat. Ransom to the editor of the Sentinel, yesterday afternoon, announced that this distinguished gentleman would be in Raleigh on the 7 o'clock train. He came, made a brief visit to the fair-grounds, and met many of the Old North State's representative men who cordially welcomed him to their midst. During the evening, a large number of our leading citizens called upon him at the Yarrowborough house, and we have yet to meet one who was not favorably impressed with him. Mr. Bayard is about six feet tall, stoutly built, but with no surplus flesh, and carries himself erect as a grenadier. His features are good, forehead slightly retreating, aquiline nose, very pale blue eyes, and light brown hair slightly sprinkled with gray. He comes of a lineage as noble as any in the land, and is worthy of his race. Although not more than forty years of age, he has been in the senate nearly eight years, and has ever stood an incorruptible champion of right and justice. In public and private life, his record is stainless; and among all the names mentioned in connection with the next Democratic presidential nomination, none ranks higher than his. An account of his reception at the capital last evening, appears in another column. He leaves at 8 o'clock this evening for Macon, Georgia. He will be serenaded at his hotel about 7 o'clock, and will then be escorted to the train by our two handsome companies, Raleigh Light Infantry and Light Artillery.

TAR DROPS.

On motion of Capt. Thigpen, General Mat. Ransom was called on to respond, which he did in a vein of mingled pathos and humor that brought down the house, time and again, in vigorous demonstrations of approval. He said he had the reputation of being too accommodating; but that he really thought it was more than he could do or expected to do, to attempt a speech. But he had to-day done for Mr. Bayard what he had never done for his wife—missed a $500 race to meet him; and he should be false to himself and to his very feeling, if he did not take to his heart and the heart of his state, the illustrious gentleman who was somewhat unexpectedly their guest. The presence to-night of the patriot senator from Delaware beneath the dome of North Carolina's capitol, calls up a hundred years of glorious memories and associations. It tells of a grand union of sovereign states restored. He thanked Mr. Bayard for coming among us; he only wished that all the people of the great north could come, and learn that we are brethren. If they should come, they would like our people better the more they knew of them. He had convinced his Delaware friend to-day, that North Carolina apple-brandy was as good as any he had ever found in Delaware or Jersey, and he would find on acquaintance that our people are just as good as their brandy. He closed by assuring the gentlemen of the society that, while such men as the Bayards live, the republic and liberty will live, the glory of our country will be secure. Gen. Clingman, in behalf of the committee on immigration, presented this report: WHEREAS, the state of North Carolina, with a territory larger than either of the states of New York or Pennsylvania, a climate favorable and pre-eminently healthy; soil generally fertile and abundant water power; with a great variety of useful minerals; with the best timber trees, in as great abundance and variety

STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The Meeting Last Evening—Highly Interesting—Proceedings—Reception of Senator Bayard—Eloquent Words of Welcome Eloquent Response to Important Resolutions, Discussions, Essays and Addresses.

The society met in the hall of representatives at half-past 7 o'clock last evening, with President Holt in the chair. The minutes of Thursday evening's session were read and approved. R. W. Best stated that he had learned Senator Bayard, of Delaware, was in the city, and moved that a committee of three be appointed to invite the distinguished gentleman to a seat in the hall. The chair appointed, as the committee, Gen. Clingman, Dr. Mills and Capt. Thigpen; and just at this moment Senator Bayard, accompanied by Senator Ransom and several other gentlemen, entered the room. The committee waited upon him, and Gen. Clingman, in a few warm words of welcome and commendation, introduced him to the society.

REMARKS OF MR. BAYARD.

Mr. Bayard rose, and in conversational tone a little tremulous with feeling, said he did not feel himself a stranger in North Carolina or among North Carolinians. His heart had been too often touched with the same wrongs and sufferings which they had endured, he had felt their woes too deeply, to be a stranger to them. He was a member of the committee of investigation, as it was called, appointed by congress in 1870, to pry into the private affairs of the sovereign state of North Carolina. The committee was appointed for unfriendly, inquisitorial and unconstitutional purposes; and, as the only Democrat upon it, he had stood between the people of North Carolina, and those who sought to malign the fair name and fame of a noble state. He had been taught from his childhood to look upon the people of North Carolina as a simple-hearted, brave and honorable race. He knew them to be an agricultural people, producers and not mere consumers; and there was no class in the state to whom he would rather speak than its representative agriculturists. To this class the country must look for bread; to them, it must, in a great measure, look for political reformation. He closed with an eloquently expressed hope that, in the future of prosperity and happiness which surely lies ahead of North Carolina, there might never come anything to interfere with the feelings of friendship and common brotherhood, which he cherished for the gentlemen before him and for all the good people of their proud state. The speech was received with repeated outbursts of applause.

GEN. RANSOM'S RESPONSE.

On motion of Capt. Thigpen, General Mat. Ransom was called on to respond, which he did in a vein of mingled pathos and humor that brought down the house, time and again, in vigorous demonstrations of approval. He said he had the reputation of being too accommodating; but that he really thought it was more than he could do or expected to do, to attempt a speech. But he had to-day done for Mr. Bayard what he had never done for his wife—missed a $500 race to meet him; and he should be false to himself and to his very feeling, if he did not take to his heart and the heart of his state, the illustrious gentleman who was somewhat unexpectedly their guest. The presence to-night of the patriot senator from Delaware beneath the dome of North Carolina's capitol, calls up a hundred years of glorious memories and associations. It tells of a grand union of sovereign states restored. He thanked Mr. Bayard for coming among us; he only wished that all the people of the great north could come, and learn that we are brethren. If they should come, they would like our people better the more they knew of them. He had convinced his Delaware friend to-day, that North Carolina apple-brandy was as good as any he had ever found in Delaware or Jersey, and he would find on acquaintance that our people are just as good as their brandy. He closed by assuring the gentlemen of the society that, while such men as the Bayards live, the republic and liberty will live, the glory of our country will be secure. Gen. Clingman, in behalf of the committee on immigration, presented this report: WHEREAS, the state of North Carolina, with a territory larger than either of the states of New York or Pennsylvania, a climate favorable and pre-eminently healthy; soil generally fertile and abundant water power; with a great variety of useful minerals; with the best timber trees, in as great abundance and variety as can be found in any territory of equal extent in the world; has comparatively a sparse population; and whereas, the population of North Carolina is peaceful and orderly, and her system of government well regulated; and whereas, she only lacks population and capital to make her a great state; therefore, Resolved, That we, the members of the North Carolina Agricultural Society, do extend a cordial invitation to all emigrants, from the old country or the new, who may be inclined to make their home among us, and do pledge them the fullest protection of person and property under an equal and just system of laws, and assure them that they will be most kindly welcomed by the citizens of the state. Dr. Mills said he thought one important item had been omitted in the report of the committee. They had mentioned our soil, our climate and our men; but they had failed to mention the women of the state, whom he considered its chief attraction, and superior to those of any other state in the Union—after a pause,—"except Delaware." Gen. Clingman supported the resolutions in a humorous speech on the agricultural riches of the state. Kemp P. Battle spoke in advocacy of the report. Governor Brogden spoke on the same side, and switched off on the Philadelphia centennial and the importance of having North Carolina represented. He urged the society to take the necessary steps to remedy the negligence or indifference of the legislature which failed to make any appropriation for this purpose. Gen. W. R. Cox followed, endorsing the views of Gov. Brogden. He said that this was the last body of importance and intelligence, representing the various sections and interests of the state, that would meet before the centennial; and he thought some action should be taken. On his motion, the resolution was adopted. Gen. Clingman was most favorably impressed with the governor's suggestions. He spoke of the vast mineral resources of the state, and wanted to see her represented at the Philadelphia centennial in 1876. He was in favor of putting Governor Brogden in for a big speech on that occasion. And he said, as he and the governor came of genuine old Methuselah stock, they expected to live to see at least four or five more centennials, having thus far only counted ninety-nine apiece on their first one. Prof. W. C. Kerr, state geologist, was asked what he could do in regard to the matter under discussion. He stated that the legislature had not only failed to make any appropriation for centennial purposes, but had positively refused to do so. The convention discussed the subject, but had no power under the act calling it to do anything. The legislature had not only declined to bear any part of the expense incurred by himself and other citizens of the state to secure valuable representation at the Vienna exposition; but had talked strongly of ensuring him for going. Col. L. J. Young introduced a resolution favoring the appointment by the president of the society, of one committeeman from each congressional district and three from the city of Raleigh, to solicit contributions for centennial purposes. Gen. Ransom introduced a substitute leaving the whole matter in the hands of the executive committee of the agricultural society. Gen. Clingman thought both original and substitute ought to be adopted, as both were good. Col. Heck, not thinking of Gen. Clingman's halting from the famous county of that name, said he thought there was a good deal of "humbug" about this whole matter (and just here the house came down in a roar of laughter).—After the "sounds of revelry by night" had died away, Col. Heck proceeded to suggest that the whole thing be turned over to the executive committee. Here the movers of both resolutions withdrew them; and Col. Heck put his suggestion in the form of this resolution: Resolved, That the executive committee of the state agricultural society be instructed to aid his excellency, the governor, as far as practicable in securing proper representation of the products and resources of North Carolina at the centennial exposition to be held in Philadelphia, A. D. 1876. Mr. Turrentine, of Statesville, said even if the state should fail to be represented, old Iredell had made arrangements and intended to be. Col. Heck's resolution was adopted. D. W. Kerr, of Alamance, read a very interesting essay on "Beef Raising and Butter Making." It was heard with marked interest; and, on motion, it and Prof. Kimberly's were requested for publication, and the thanks of the society were tendered to both gentlemen. The president announced that there were essays in his hands on "Grape Culture," by James Norwood, of Orange;
