liability of advertisers of "non-explosive" oils for damages, in the event of accident or injury resulting from their use. The petroleum inspection laws of this state which, if properly enforced, might afford a very reasonable degree of security to the users of burning oils, have proved in practice (which introduces the personal equation) so utterly inefficient as to be generally admitted to be worthless. Perhaps the presecution of unscrupulous compounders of benzine mixtures and "combinations" may lead to something more tangible in the way of protecting life and property.—
