

TOMORROW.

WHEN you my charming fair, I press, With smiles you answer my caress, But to my constant sorrow, When love expects his due reward...

From the Salem Gazette. The following humorous passage was transcribed by a gentleman of this town from a letter from Dr. FRANKLIN to his brother, written in 1745.

Our people are extremely impatient to hear of your success at Cape Breton. My shop is filled with thirty enquirers at the coming of every post. I tell them that I shall be glad to hear that news in three months hence.

AN IRISH BULL.—During the late disturbances in Ireland, the following was written by an officer of the army: "This town is all in an uproar, expecting the rebels every hour."

DUELING is one of the few evils which may be supposed to increase at the close of a war. Men who are in earnest may not easily get out of the habit of fighting.

The present fashion of wearing long shoes was it is well known, the mode in the time of the Edwards and Henries. It appears, however, that as late as the time of Charles II. the fashion prevailed.

During the memorable procession on Saturday last in the Park, a grenadier very neatly observed, that John Bull ought in future to change his name to John Bullock.

By the terms of the new Convention Treaty, no captain is allowed to search without just and sufficient grounds for suspicion. Beautiful indecise words!
