SCRAPS OF THE WORLD.

As I have been for some time picking up scraps from different parts of the world, and as I have nothing better to do, at present, I propose to send them out, through the columns of the Sentinel. Some one of the readers, may thus, perhaps, pick up a scrap he never saw before, even if it should be scrap of nonsense.

It is curious to view the various ways which men have hit upon to display either their pride, their splendour or their folly. Among these, different orders of honour are not the least prominent. The Golden Fleece of Spain, and the mighty Elephant of Denmark, arose from the marriage of Isabella of Portugal. Alphonso of Portugal instituted the Wing of St. Michael, because that Angel, he said, assisted him in battle. Henry III. of France formed the order of the Holy Ghost, because he was born on Whitsunday, was elected king of Poland on Whitsunday, and ascended the throne of France on Whitsunday! A courtezan of Edward III. the Countess of Salisbury, dropped her garter, and gave rise to the order of that name in England "What great effects from little causes spring!" There was an order in Venice called the Knights of the Stocking. The honorable members were a yellow stocking on one leg and a green one on the other. The Knights of the Bath came from the act o Bathing. But the most honourable of al was the Order of Fools, established by Adolphus, Count of Cleves, on the feast of St. Rumbert.

It's neither rhyme nor reason. - This old saying originated with Sir Thomas Moore. Lord Chancellor of England, in the reign of Henry VIII. A foolish fellow having written a ridiculous book, requested the opinion of Sir Thomas on its merits, who desired him to turn it into verse, which the author accordingly did, and brought it to the chancellor. "Why, ay now," said the satirical knight, "this is something like. Now 'tis rhyme, but before, it was neither rhyme nor reason."

What is Content?-A hard question A certain prince built a splendid palace. inscribed on the front with the motto--" For the most contented."-A person claimed it as the most contented man in the world. "That cannot be," said the prince, "or you would not want my palace." The prince might have safely built a palace of pearl upon the same conditions

Human Species .- Much has been said and written to prove that all men did, and did not, spring from Adam and his consort: some say that climate alone has made all the changes of complexion, shape, &c.others that this is impossible, for that varieties exist even in the same country and clime. A celebrated author tells us that there were people without heads," and that they had one eye in the centre of the breast. The guilotine would have been useless among them. I think that Lord Kaimes, one of the most celebrated geniuses of the 18th century, has satisfactorily shown, although he is an unbeliever in the effects of climate, that the diversity of our species is no argument against our common belief. In the confusion of Babel, he thinks, and with powerful reason, that men, as they were scattered abroad, received constitutions and colours, forms and features, suitable to the climates they were destined to occupy, and that all these varietes were imposed upon them, as meliorating the punishment they received for their presumption in attempting to scale the heavens. Thus is sacred and profane history beautifully reconciled.

Resenting Injuries - There is nothing more curious to the enquiring mind than the different modes, which individuals of different nations take to revenge private injuries. The man of modern honour calls his injurer to the field of equal combat, and besides the injury received, runs a great chance or having his brains, if he have any, blown out into the bargain. The common people of China nave a different, but equally curious method of seeking satisfaction, as it is called. The two parties place their feet across a beam about ten feet high, and hang their head down. Under each is placed a sharp stone, and whoever falls first, gets a thump that sometimes breaks his scuil, and toen the other is taken down In this case, the strongest sine ws gain the day, whether their owner is the aggressor or not. Now, the Japanese have a way still more curious, for if a min insults them. they murder themselves instead of the in sulter. An author of eminence, Kemp fer, tells an anecdote exactly in point. Two gentlemen, in Niphon, the residence of the Japanese Emperor, the one ascending and the other descending, the stairs of the palace, happened to touch swords. The descending gentlemen took this as in insuit, and the ascending gentleman said his sword was as good as the other's, "We will see that," said the descending gentleman, and drawing his sword immediately stabbed bimselt. The ascending gentleman hastened up stairs with a plate, which he was carrying to the Emperor, and returning just as his adversary was expiring. stanned himself in live manner, exclaiming -" It I had not been serving the prince, you should'nt have got the start of me However, I have now proved my sword to be as good as yours." Thus the gentle men, both ascending and descending, received satisfaction. All modern duels MORE ANON. should end just so.
