PEOPLE'S TICKET.

(Election Thursday 13th November.)

FOR PRESIDENT

ANDREW JACKSON, (OF TENNESSEE)

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory."

"General Jackson is a clear-headed, strong-minded man, and has more of the Roman in him, than any man now living."

"It is fortunate for the country that General Jackson is likely to be fit for public life for four years after; for in him seems to be the only hope left of avoiding the dangers manifestly about to arise out of the broad construction now given to the Constitution of the United States, which effaces all limitations of powers, and leaves the General Government, by theory, altogether untrammelled."

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

"The recollection of the public relations in which I stood to General Jackson, while President, and the proofs given to him, of the high estimation in which he was held by me." &c. JAMES MADISON.

"My friendship for General Jackson, and the strong proofs of confidence and regard I have given him, while President, forbids my taking any part in the ensuing presidential election."

JAMES MONROE.

"General Jackson justly enjoys in an eminent degree the public favor; and of his worth, talents and services, no one entertains a higher, or more respectful opinion than myself."

"An officer whose services entitle him to the highest rewards, and whose whole career has been signalized by the purest intentions and the most elevated purposes."

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

"Towards that distinguished Captain (Andrew Jackson) who has shed so much GLORY ON OUR COUNTRY, whose renowned CONSTITUTIONS OR GREAT A PORTION OF ITS MORAL PROPERTY, I never had, I never can have, any other feeling than that of the most profound RESPECT and of the utmost kindness."

HENRY CLAY.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,

JOHN C. CALHOUN,

(OF SOUTH CAROLINA.)

POLITICS.

Good morning, Messrs. Hill and Greene; good morning to you all; I've just come in from Baltimore, and mean to stay till fall; I like your ancient city, here, and theatres, you know; Your common music, crescent-pond, and churches, are so so; Your ministers, and editors, and editresses stand in bold relief above the crowd that throng our faded land; And Jackson men and Adams men, are prowling round the streets, With fearful, scowling faces on, as e'er a body meels. Ahaft in ancient Gotham, I encountered Major Noah; I met the man in William's street, by Thomas Snowden's door; His pantalons were lifted up and rested on his boots; And all my Adams arguments, he routed by the roots; I never thought they were so weak—so fallible till then; I had always look'd on Adams, as the likeliest of men; A fearful thing for Adams thoughts to be observed with packs on, Emerging from the human bosom, driven out by Jackson. And when I cross'd the water, in a clapperclawing boat, The passengers indulged me with a presidential vote; There were 63 for Hickory, and 9 for Henry Clay; And 6 for Adams, 3 for Webster—So the matter lay; I'm sure it was an honest vote—for 'twas a rule of mine, That those who held the strongest side, should pay a glass of wine; And all appeared humorous, intelligent, sedate, And many of them join'd in a political debate.

A NEW BARGAIN!

THE subscriber will certainly sell to the highest bidder, on Wednesday the 22d day of October next, on the premises, the tract of Land on which he now lives, on the following terms, viz: one-third part of the purchase money to be paid 1st January, 1829, one-third the 1st of January, 1830, and the remaining third the 1st of January, 1831. Bonds with approved securities, will be required, or notes negotiable at either of the Banks at Raleigh. The above tract of land is situated in the county of Granville, 8 miles south of Roanoke, and 17 miles north of Oxford, lying on the waters of Grassy and Jonathan's Creeks, containing nineteen hundred acres, six or seven hundred of which are cleared in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to the growth of Wheat, Cotton, Corn, and Tobacco. There are about 150 or 200 acres of low grounds. Of the ridge land seven or eight hundred acres contiguous to the dwelling, are inferior to none in this section of the country, with ten or fifteen constant Springs. The improvements are extensive; the dwelling house is among the largest, most roomy, and in every respect, the most convenient in the county. It is new and built of the very best materials, beautifully situated on a gentle eminence, overlooking a large extent of country. The out houses of every kind, are also new, and in a style of accommodation suited to the dwelling house. Within half a mile of the dwelling, are a saw and grist mill, and cotton gin. The grist mill yields 1000 bushels of corn and 150 or 200 bushels of wheat per annum. A ready sale may always be made of the produce of the saw mill. It contains an extensive Orchard, with a great variety of fruits. The tract is situated in the centre of a neighborhood, which for health, wealth, intelligence, morals, and every social consideration, yields to none in the State. The subscriber forbears a more minute description of the above tract, as those wishing to purchase, are expected to come and judge for themselves, previously to the day of sale. NOTICE.

THE Executors and Trustees of the Estate of Moses Griffin, dec'd have hitherto been prevented from proceeding to the execution of their trust, in consequence of a suit in chancery on the part of the heirs, bringing into question the legal validity of the trust. The suit was instituted shortly after the death of the testator, to wit: on the 12th of June, 1828. A bill of review ensued, which again suspended the operations of the trustees, until at the late June term, the Supreme Court pronounced a final decree in affirmance of the original decree: that is, declaring the trust created by the will of their testator a good and valid trust. These impediments being now removed, the trustees are desirous forthwith to carry into effect the objects of the trust reposed in them; and to this end, all persons indebted to the Executors of Moses Griffin, as such, are requested to pay up the interest in arrear on their respective debts, and to renew their obligations for the principal, with such security as the Executors may approve of. All persons failing in a reasonable time after this publication to comply with this request, are hereby notified, that the interest and duty of the Executors will impose on them the necessity of putting the claims in a train of collection to the succeeding County Courts. CATULLUS NO. 2.

From the New-York Evening Post. MR. ADAMS' POLITICAL CHARACTER We had hitherto stood in the glory of our ancient honors like some venerable tree once the pride of the grove, which had endured the blast of a thousand wintry storms, yet still continued to wear the green livery of its youth, though its trunk was indented with lightning marks, and its limbs twisted and torn by whirlwinds—and like that too we found our ruin in the worm, the vile worm, which lurked at the root. Our opposition to the administration of Mr. Jefferson had been distinguished by much excitement of feeling, but in none were violence and uncompromising hostility more distinctly manifested than in you.—However, in the party conflicts of that day, the combatants would sometimes pause to let the people know that they had some respect for each other. But their warfare soon assumed a character of unyielding animosity, of deep and inveterate rancour. To you may be traced that stern spirit of hostility, that enduring suspicion which for twenty years has been cherished amongst the great democratic party in the United States against their federal brethren, a spirit far transcending the ordinary animosity of political rivalry, a spirit which has even blasted the prospects of many noble minded and talented democrats, who had been so unfortunate as to receive federal support, and so unwise as to accept it. Conscious of innocence, yet matter of accusation was found against them in their most innocent acts. Suspected and distrusted, they lived in their own country like strangers in a foreign land, like the Jews in Palestine, like the Greeks in the once proud Peloponnesus, now the Turkish Morea. They lived on the lands of their fathers, whose graves were scattered around them, but their penates were unknown gods. Deemed by their opponents to be unworthy of honor or trust, because they had plotted the dismemberment of the confederacy, they deemed themselves the victims of oppression. Suspicion hung over them like a cloud, as permanent as those which eternally brood over the far distant seas of the South. In vain might a Van Ransselaer point to his bleeding wounds. In vain might a Hull, a Decatur, a Bainbridge, or a Stewart, show their glorious flags triumphant in many an ocean battle. In vain might a Perry or a MacDonough, open a new scene of glory amid the solitude of the lakes: the suspicion remained, and federalism and treachery were yet synonymous.

Time brings many dark transactions to light; the foul slanderer of the federal party who infused his poison into the minds of the three last Presidents, now stands revealed in the person of one of the most cherished of its sons. It was left for you to accuse the federalists of a conspiracy to dismember the States, and of a design to form a confederacy with the British provinces of North America, and to establish a new government under the protection of Great Britain.

Can you deny that you made such a disclosure to President Jefferson? Dare you deny it? The proofs which have been given to the public by Gov. Giles under the sanction of his name, the allusion in his speeches at the time, the recent letter of Mr. Jefferson disclosing a knowledge of the same fact, the speech of Mr. Randolph in the Senate three years ago, [the report of which was suppressed,] the silence of your federal friends in that body when they were compelled to listen to the vindication of the integrity of their party from a veteran republican, the inflexible enemy of your father and yourself; your own silence, and the silence of your official editors, who scream in the agony of their peevishness and anger when charges of a character far less infamous than this are hinted in the opposition papers, would produce an irresistible conviction in any unprejudiced mind that you did make that disclosure. You cannot in a case like this hide behind the throne and plead your privilege. You have accused your fellow citizens of plotting treason! That you made such an accusation is asserted by the governor of a state, a veteran statesman whose name is known as far yours, and who has been before the public in high office for forty years, and who speaks from personal knowledge. Admit the disclosure to have been true, it would have come with a better grace from any other person in the United States than from you. You were the political friend of the men who you accused. They were your patrons. They had given you the bread which you had eaten. Their "houses, tables, fortunes, all were yours." As to you, they had committed no offence. There had not been the least intermission of friendly intercourse between you. They had abandoned their best and ablest men to give their offices to you. Your knowledge of their reasonable intentions implies an intercourse of the most confidential kind. Men do not go into the streets to proclaim the treasons which they intend to commit. The fact could not have come to your knowledge unless from a communication of the most secret and sacred character. The office which gave to your disclosure its consequence and its credit had been given to you by them. It was the revelation of a Senator of the United States to the President of the United States.—When Governor Giles pressed you to the disclosure you were in great distress. Your face wore its gloomiest aspect. You were doubtful as to your duty, but yet your bosom could find no place for mercy. You loved your country so well that you could not spare your friends! The sacrifice was great, but patriotism required it!

The secrecy which attended this mysterious disclosure belies its truth. Your charges against the federal party were not of a vague and general character. Your information, it would seem, was particular.—The names of those who were concerned, the names of the foreign agents with whom this treasonable intercourse was holden, were submitted to the President. Your facts were carefully arranged with far more attention to accuracy and probability than those which your great prototype, Dr. Oates, submitted to the ministers of Charles II. His infamous cruelties filled England with dismay, and stained her land with the blood of innocence; but here there was no investigation of this alarming and dangerous conspiracy. Mr. Jefferson was possessed of the names of the New-England conspirators. But no message was sent to Congress. No judicial investigation was ordered. The public papers, (which are seldom backward on such occasions,) never brought forth the name of a single individual in connection with this plot.

Did Mr. Jefferson doubt the truth of your disclosure? Was secrecy imposed on him? Was he restrained by his promise of honour? Did you stipulate for the safety and concealment of those whom you accused? Did your dark policy suggest to your mind the expediency of initiating the suspicion into the mind of the President, and yet staying the avenging arm of
