FROM THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

SPAIN, THE HOLY ALLIANCE, AND AMERICA.

We scarcely know how to express ourselves in terms sufficiently measured, and yet honestly indicative of the real state of our mind, relative to the counter-revolution effected in Spain by the Armies of France, and conduct of FER-DINAND immediately on regaining liberty and power. We must not forget that both nations are in a state of amity with ours, and therefore entitled to the same respectful consideration, which two of our neighbors might expect, who, though they managed their own affairs very badly, and interfered with each other's concerns unjustly, yet each lived in friendly intercourse with ourselves.
Whenever we have touched on this subject, we have felt and endeavored to communicate the impression to others that, as Americans, it is both our interest and duty to keep aloof from the political squabbles of Europe; and that we may always heartily wish success to every wise and well-meant effort at reform, and the extension of political freedom in every country, yet we have no inclination to become Knights Errant, even in the cause of Liberty. We have been told that "for a nation to be free, it is sufficient that she wills it." And when we sometimes expressed our fears as to the issue of the contest in Spain, it has been because we apprehended that the nation, as a nation, neither knew what freedom was, nor desired it. At times, from the noble stand, and firm and prudent conduct of the Constitutionalists, we hoped that we had been mistaken in these apprehensions, and that there was a redeeming spirit in the country, which would surmount all difficulties, and carry them through the arduous contest.— We have watched, with anxious solicitude, the feverish alternation of hope and depression that has marked the feeble struggles of Liberty; and trusted the patient had strength enough at heart to survive. But it is all over. There were some noble spirits in Spain, whom we admire as much for their moderation as their intrepidity. Had they been such miscreants as rose to power at the beginning of the French Revolution, the King of Spain would never have embraced his "august and well-beloved cousin the Duke D'ANGOLEME."— They have descended to be associated in glory with the Portiers and Lacys who preceded them, but we sincerely grieve that many of them must also share their fate: and have probably before this, expiated the unpardonable crime of loving freedom with their blood.

And all this from France, too! By her legions, led on by men who once swore eternal hatred to despotism, and inflamed Europe with the love of Liberty has Spanish freedom been destroyed!
Did they not hear her exclaim as she fell, ET TU BRUTE! This is the unkind-est stroke of all. We shall be much surprised if she do not repent of this cre-long. But, we are not Prophets, nor Prophets' sons, and, therefore, we forbear, for the present, to say, what we think of the extraordinary impolicy of this measure. They have lent themselves to destroy representative government abroad. How long will it remain unassailed at home?

One thing is now put out of all doubt: the Holy Alliance are sworn enemies to the Representative system; they will not suffer it to exist where their bayonets can reach in sufficient force.
We may see the reason, too, why the King of England could not be a member of the Holy Alliance. It would cost him his crown, as certainly as a like conduct forfeited it forever from the Stewart family. The English nation has once unhappily been betrayed, in our own Revolutionary war with her, into an unnatural position, fighting against Freedom, of which she herself had set the noblest example. So, also, in her war with France, the measures of her Government, both at home and abroad, have been inexcusable, oppressive, and in violation of all liberal prin-principles—but still England is constitutionally free. She will never abandon the Representative system, nor the principles that placed the House of Brunswick on the throne. Her counsels, too, have manifestly become more wise and liberal of late. We believe her best and most influential statesmen are well aware, that English Freedom and American Independence are equally hateful to those who would enslave Europe, and who are determined, if possible, to bring back the darkness and despotism of absolute Monarchy, and the tyranny of Superstition on all the nations. They cannot see what dependence is to be placed on men, who will promise, and swear, and issue proclamations, and declare war, in the name of the People, and in favor of Liberty, and who, the moment they are released from compulsion, or the influence of fear, will banish or destroy every enlightened and liberal mind from their presence, rescind with a stroke of the pen their oaths, and promises, and laws, restore the Inquisition, and an-null the freedom of the Press. Faithless wretches! We could not suppress the exclamation.

We turn from the sickening scene to felicitate ourselves. We shall love our country better than ever. Our fortified coast, and our gallant Navy, will be no vain or useless boast. The day may come, sooner than we have thought on, when they may not only be our defence, but a barrier to preserve the remaining liberties of the world. The great question is not practically decided, though we have no doubt of the result, whether educated and enlightened men are to be governed by laws made with their own consent, and adapted to their actual circumstances; or whether they must continue to obey the imperious and capricious decrees of men whom birth and accident, not merit or virtue, have unfortunately placed on a throne? In short, whether the childish superstitions and gew-gaws of the infancy of civilized society are to continue to disgust the sober judgment of the wise, and to render the less instructed the dupes and tools of hypocrisy and knavery to the end of time?
No, it cannot be. The groaning Earth will gape and yawn beneath such an insufferable weight of folly.

America is free. The North and South of our vast continent will say to the tide of tyranny, "Here shall thy proud waves be stayed!"

What a sublime contrast does our country exhibit to the disorganizing tendency of absolute Monarchy! Our Presidents peacefully presiding according to law, then quietly retiring to the tranquil shades of private life, esteemed for their virtues, and respected for their services—their successors following the same steps, and the wheels of government rolling smoothly on! We have five Candidates for the next succession, and their respective partizans are sufficiently fervid and noisy in supporting their pretensions; but who supposes that the country will be convulsed, or unsettled, by any decision that may take place? It is known that we have our partialities, like others; but we hesitate not to declare that it is our belief that any one of the Candidates would govern the country well, and constitutionally. We believe so, because, independently of our estimation of their personal talents and virtues, (and they all deserve esteem on those accounts,) our CONSTITUTIONAL SYSTEM will not let any man go widely wrong.
We are not of the number who feel any fears of the inroads of tyranny upon us, or that are sacred by the prophetic vision of Monarchy in our land. We do not believe there is any leaning to it in this Union, nor in our apprehension will there ever be. Our fellow citizens are too wise, and too virtuous, to allow of any alarm on this subject.
May they always continue such!

In Europe, the Holy Alliance have once more stopped the mouth of the revolutionary volcano with ashes and earth; but the fire, though pent up, is not extinguished: it will burn in secret with great fierceness, and explode with overwhelming fury in perhaps an unexpected hour. Those governments alone will be safe in whose existence the people have an interest, and in whom, of course, they repose confidence. The next great contest will be differently arranged. It may be severe and long, but its issue will decide whether any of mankind are to be free, excepting the inhabitants of this Western Continent. Here, at least, the arm of despotism shall not be raised, or, if raised, it will only be to provoke its own destruction.

INTERESTING INCIDENT.

The following incident occurred upon a desolate island of Lake Erie, about the 2d of September last. Major Keeler, of Port Lawrence, on the Maumee River, with his interesting little daughter Grace, aged about 16 years, took passage from Sandusky Bay, in the schr. Eclipse, which was bound to Detroit. The Major requested the captain to set him and his daughter ashore on Middle Bass, one of the cluster of the Put-in-Bay Islands, for the purpose of taking a small boat to go to Port Lawrence. The Major engaged a Mr. Martin and his son to take himself and daughter to the place of residence. They embarked from the island in a small boat, with good weather. Having proceeded on their way about twenty miles, they were overtaken by the late tremendous storm, which jeopardised so many human lives, and vessels of every description, on the Lakes. They fortunately made the Western Sister Island; but so irresistible was the raging storm, that the Island, which contains about a hundred acres, although it afforded them dry land and momentary security, for themselves, from the violence of the storm, yet it afforded none to the frail bark, and she was dashed in pieces on the rocks, in spite of all their efforts to prevent it. They were then without any possible means of transporting themselves to an inhabited land, or sheltering themselves from the force of the tempest. An old meat axe was the only instrument which accident had left them for the preservation of their lives upon this remote and desolate Island.
Totally destitute of any kind of provisions, and without any possible means of procuring any, no more gloomy prospect could be presented to the human mind. When and how they should get relief, was altogether left to accident or the interposition of Providence.
After subsisting several days on snakes and snails which was the only food they could procure on the Island; they undertook to dig out with their old axe, the trunk of a bass-wood tree, which was barely large enough to carry Mr. Martin and his boy. In this, the two committed themselves to the mercy of the winds and waves, and steered their course to the island whence they came. In this very uncertain and clumsy vessel, they had to venture about twenty miles in the open lake.
With the greatest difficulty and utmost struggle, Mr. Martin and his son reached the island, and procured a boat, and went immediately to the relief of Major Keeler and his daughter, and, to the great satisfaction of the boat's crew found them still alive, though greatly emaciated with hunger, having subsisted six days entirely on snakes and snails.
