MISSO LONGHI.

The history of the siege of Missolonghi has been published at Paris, by M. Auguste Fabre, a French writer of considerable celebrity. It contains a number of interesting details with respect to that memorable event. The bravery and self-devotion of the unfortunate Greeks are painted with a masterly pencil. It is well known, that after being disappointed in all their hopes of aid, feeling their ramparts crumbling under their feet, seeing their fathers, their wives, and their children, perishing by famine, the garrison sent a communication to the only corps that was able to give them any succour, that of Katakaki, requesting it to attack the rear of the enemy on a certain day and to announce its arrival by a general discharge of musquetry, at which moment the garrison would make a sortie, and endeavour to cut their way through the besieging army. On the appointed day, the population of Missolonghi were assembled—There remained three thousand soldiers, (including those who, although sick or wounded, were capable to march by the assistance of their comrades,) a thousand artificers or other men unused to fighting, and about five thousand women and children. The Grecian women who fancied themselves strong enough to brave the fatigue and danger of the sortie, dressed themselves in men's clothes, in order that if they were unable to escape the enemy, they might be mistaken for soldiers and put to death instantly. Many of them hung round their necks and round the necks of their children, as a protecting talisman, the revered relics of their ancestors; and wore concealed daggers, with which either to strike the enemy, or secure their not being taken alive. Those whose weakness forbade them from following the troops, joined the desperately won-ded, the sick, the aged, and the infants, resolved to bury themselves in the ruins of the town. It was a terrible moment.

Almost all the families of Missolonghi were divided into two parts; those who remained in expectation of death, and those who were on the point of rushing forth to vengeance and to new dangers. The hardest warriors were subdued to tears; and the bravest hearts quailed at the approaching separation. All these preparations were, however, rendered abortive by the infamous treachery of a Bulgarian soldier, who had deserted to Ibrahim and disclosed the whole plan. The Turks suddenly attacked the town, and themselves in Christian blood. The scene that followed was hideous. "But one voice was heard among the despairing women," says M. Fabre:
"To the sea! to the sea!" Many precipitated themselves into the wells, into which they first threw their children. But the wells at length became full, it was a long way from the ramparts to that part of the harbour which was sufficiently deep for the purpose of death. The conquerors, anxious for slaves, followed close on their victims. Several women, and even several children, had the address and the good fortune to free themselves by throwing themselves on the naked swords of the Arabs; others plunged into the flames of the burning houses; twelve hundred who could discover no way of destroying themselves, fell into the hands of the enemy.

"The attention of the conquerors was soon drawn to the powder magazine. The size and solidity of the building induced them to believe that the wealth of the inhabitants had been there deposited. It contained, however, only women and children, and Capsalis (one of the primates of the town, who having obstinately refused to accompany the garrison in their projected sortie, conducted to the powder magazine a crowd of women and children, saying, 'come and be still; I will myself set fire to it.') They went not, they had no parting to apprehend; the grave, was about to unite them for ever. The mothers travelling pressed their infants to their breasts, relying on Capsalis. In the meanwhile, the enemy crowded round their asylum; some attempted to break open the doors; some to enter by the windows; some climbed to the roof, and endeavoured to demolish it. At length, Capsalis perceiving that a vast number had assembled, uttered a brief prayer, familiar to the Greeks—'Lord remember me!' and applied the match. The explosion was a violent blast, that the neighbouring houses were thrown down, large chasms were produced in the earth, and the sea moved from its bed, inundating one part of the town. Two thousand barbarians were blown up with this terrible sound."

MY UNCLE'S WEDDING.

My uncle was a man of other years: his habits of acting and thinking were all formed in the old school. He lived twenty years with an old fashioned wife, and as they had been born & brought up together, they got along very well, and were as hearty, thriving, happy a couple as any that are to be found to this day in Anandale. But the good woman died at last, and my uncle could not endure a life of single blessedness, as some call it; it was very wretchedness to him.

So he married a new wife, with new notions, new fashions, and all the et ceteras of the modern school. He thought he did a very wise thing. He tapped me on the shoulder just as we were sitting down to the wedding supper: "Bob," said he, in half a whisper, "get married, there is nothing like it." "Certainly, sir," for I reverenced his counsel, "but if you please I'll stand by and look on a little longer."

When the bustle and noise was over, I went down to the Dale to spend the summer with my uncle. The good old dame had begun the work of reformation: cunning as a fox, she had broke ground gently at first. There was a rich new mirror hung low in the parlour; a bold encroachment, for the old gentleman used always to hold that looking glasses were only made to shave by, and that nobody who don't wear a beard ever ought to look in one; accordingly, his own glass had hung chin high for a quarter of a century, and none of his own children had ever seen their own faces, until they knew the use of a razor.

One after another the old articles of furniture were displaced, and new carpets, chairs, tables, &c. introduced by my good aunt; and whenever her spouse evinced the slightest disposition to be angry, she gave him a good natured chuck under the chin, and assured the dear fellow that a good wife was always mistress of her own house, and that she was determined to be a good wife, and rule the roost in her own domestic. Beside, she taught my uncle that his handsome furniture entitled him to look a little above his neighbours; to claim that quality, which should, as much as possible, exclude the idea of equality, a vulgar doctrine that had long been prevalent in the Dale.

My good uncle yielded inch after inch to his worthy spouse, until the whole house was fitted up in style, and a common farmer would hardly know where to set down his clumsy foot in it. She obtained over him a wonderful ascendancy somehow; for he got to be as docile as a lamb. Sometimes, it is true, he looked sorrowful and signed deeply, and took his broad brimmed hat and cane, and trudged over the fields to neighbour Hodge's, to sit and smoke his pipe again in an old oak chair, by the great chimney place, and when he seemed loth to go back again; but he loved peace, and always went home at tea-time.

My aunt was a woman of talents. She did one thing at a time. She was sure to be successful in whatever she undertook, for she bent all her mind to the single object. It is this singleness of purpose that removes mountains. She had now set her brute to rights, as she called it, and from sundry hints and preparations, I began ere long to surmise that she intended setting her old man to rights next.

There was very little of the dandy about my uncle. He wore a great brimmed hat upon his hale round head—a shad-bellied coat of grassy green, with dark ivory bot-tons; a vest of the genuine old school, and like materials and trappings, velvet small clothes, buckles, and very large shoes, and made a very portly venerable appearance in the sun. Besides, he used spectacles and tobacco, and trod flat upon his feet when he walked.

My aunt began her second campaign.
She bought him a wig and a quizzing-glass, declaring that he looked fifty years too old for her in his old fashions—and she got them on too. The old man was a little testy, but she took him by the arm and brought his bald pate and spectacles before the mirror—she was a fine looking young woman, and my uncle, I think, felt a little ashamed to appear so old. At any rate this was the argument she used. His tobacco box went next. My uncle scolded—my aunt reasoned—and she beat him in the argument—though he urged that tobacco was necessary to preserve his teeth, but she sent for a dentist and had them plugged and accoured, till he fairly cried for mercy, and assured the dentist they would last forever.

But my uncle's troubles did not end here.
The next time this good old lady went to town she brought him a new suit of bright blue cloth. The coat and vest would not meet round him by eight inches; but my aunt gravely told him, her husband was not to look like a pudding bag, the clothes were of a perfect genteel shape and size, and if they didn't fit then—that was all.
So after bandying a good many more hard words than had been used in his house before, she got six thicknesses of flannel off —and as he had grown in his way of dressing rather too large, she fitted up a set of her old stays, and compressed his rotundity a little more, when the clothes went on and buttoned. She had a good deal of sweetness in her disposition, however, and she assured him over and over as he sat gasping for breath beside her, that he would soon grow quite genteel, and the clothes become very easy, by dieting a little.

My uncle's standing establishment still required alterations, however. The good dame vowed, that at present, in his new costume, he looked just like a turkey; she got him a small pair of boots, which were, when got on, to the infinite dissatisfaction of sundry grievous cors, which had been undisturbed by pressure for years. My uncle could neither walk nor breathe without pain; but diet and exercise were prescribed, and he was a subdued man. He went limping about when I left him, and the last words he said to me were, "Bob—Bob—take—care—how—you—marry," with a long breath and a sigh between each word.
I have heard since, with infinite regret that my uncle is crazy; that when he goes in the sun, he protests that the shadow of Timothy Oldheart is missing, and that the devil in the shape of a dandy, pursues him at every step, and always keeps somehow between him and his lawful, portly, old fashioned shade. It is sad news, Messrs. Editors, and you will pity with me the sorrows of the poor old man.

SELLING OFF.

THE Subscriber being desirous of declining his Mercantile Business, will dispose of his whole stock in trade on accommodating terms, and will also with the goods rent the store and warehouse if required. The goods are well laid in, principally with cash, the assortment general and of great variety, consisting of dry goods, groceries, queen's and glass ware, paints, medicines. The store House large and commodious, 36 by 24, with a cellar underneath of same dimensions, situated on Fayetteville street, on as good a stand for business as any in the city.

To a young man, active and enterprising, who was disposed to embark in active and extensive business, this would doubtless prove a very profitable establishment. Until a sale or disposition as above offered is effected, I shall continue business as usual; but as I am anxious to decline as soon as possible, will dispose of every species of dry goods at unusually reduced prices. As groceries are already sold by me, and I believe by every store in this place, without profit, the current prices of them cannot be reduced. I tender to my friends and customers my sincere thanks for past favours and hope (while I continue in business) to share a part of their custom and patronage.

Board of Trustees will be held at the University, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Board of Visitors, upon sundry Resolutions heretofore referred to them, and of considering other subjects of importance to the Institution.

To obtain a general concert of opinion in these matters, and to superintend with increased vigilance and care, the Anniversary Examinations and Exercises of the young gentlemen of the College, a punctual attendance of the Committee, and of the Trustees generally, is solicited and expected.

By order of the Board,

RANDOLPH WEBB.

ALFRED WILLIAMS.

Raleigh, May 11th, 1827.

Medicines, Drugs, &c.

THE Subscriber having become proprietor of the establishment recently conducted by Webb & Williams, informs his friends and the public generally that he intends keeping constantly for sale, a large and extensive assortment of Medicines, Paints, Oils, Hatter's Materials, Shop Furniture, Surgical Instruments, &c. &c.
Physicians & merchants, dealing in the above articles, will find it to their advantage to call and examine his assortment, as he intends selling low for Cash or approved credit.

He shortly expects his Summer supply, and respectfully solicits a share of public patronage.

ALFRED WILLIAMS.

Having disposed of my interest in the late concern of Webb & Williams, to Mr.
Alfred Williams, I take pleasure in recommending him to the confidence and patronage of my friends and the public, as a young man well qualified to discharge the duties of an Apothecary (having been engaged with me in the business for several years.)

I hope that that share of public favor, will be bestowed on him, which I have realized during a succession of years in business, and for which I feel deeply indebted.

May 14, RANDOLPH WEBB.

FOR SALE.

A valuable Plantation in Wake.

THAT valuable Farm, lately known by the name of West-Hill, lying on both sides of Swift & Williams's Creeks, adjoining the Plantation of Governor Branch, about nine miles from Raleigh, on the Road to Haywood, settled originally by Joseph Lane, the Grandfather of the late occupant of that name, at a time when farmers had choice of the best lands in the country.
The whole Tract of land contains Two Thousand Two Hundred and Twenty acres—near 1200 of which is prime land—a considerable portion of it fine low grounds. The residue is well-tilled long leaved Pine Land, and is supposed to afford the best range for cattle and hogs in the county. The farm under cultivation is between 3 and 400 acres, on which there is a tolerably good Dwelling-House, and other out-buildings, as an handsome and healthy site as can be found in the county, or perhaps in the State. There is a small Grist-Mill, which is convenient for family and neighbourhood purposes.

The farm is in good order, and that and the kind may be viewed, on application to Mr. Thomas Howell, on the premises; and the terms of sale, which will be accommodating, will be made known on application to J. Gales.

Raleigh, April 26, 1827. 59-11.

LITERARY.

To promote the cause of Literature and to give additional interest to their anniversaries, the students of the University have entered into the following resolution, viz. That some individual who has been a regular member of one of the Literary Societies attached to the University, shall be chosen every succeeding year, to deliver a public Oration in the College Chapel, in the day preceding each anniversary commencement. In compliance with this resolution, the friends of Literature are informed that the Hon. Archibald D. Murphey has been appointed to deliver an oration, on the part of the Dialectic Society, in the College Chapel on the 27th of June next. We are happy to state, that this appointment has been accepted, and that the resolution has not only received the approbation of the distinguished individual, who is to be our Orator, but also of the Faculty of the University. We sincerely hope that all who take any interest in the literary character of the state will encourage our attempt by their attendance at the time and place specified.

By order of the

DIALLECTIC SOCIETY,

Chapel Hill, April 19th, 1827. 58-60.

Notice.

THE undersigned having been qualified at the present Court of Pleas and Quarter Sessions for the county of Wake, as Executor of the last Will and Testament of the late Dr. Jasper Gillett, of said county, calls upon all persons in-

Twenty Dollars Reward.

RANAWAY from our Mills at Wilmington, four or five weeks since, a dark Mulatto man named CHARLES, 26 or 27 years of age, about 5 feet seven inches in height, and stoutly built. We purchased Charles in January, 1826, he has wrought with our Carpenters most of the time since.
