[From the National Intelligencer.] THE SIX MILITIA MEN.

We said, when we the other day informed our readers that the proceedings of the Court Martial at Mobile, towards the close of the war, had been found in one of the apartments of the Adjutant General's Office, that we would publish them if allowed to do so. The having made this promise, makes it necessary for us to say, that we have applied for a copy of those proceedings, thus far without success.
The Department, perhaps has an objection to giving them, through the newspapers, to the public; which we do not mean to find fault with. We have little doubt that they will come before the People, ere long, through some channel or other, when it will be seen whether or not the Nashville Committee, in selecting one of the cases as a sample of the whole, took the most or the least exceptionable one. For ourselves, we are so well satisfied with what we already know, from the General's discreet defenders at Nashville, that we want no further evidence of a needless shedding of the blood of those militia men. This, let it be remembered, we do not, nor ever did, charge upon General Jackson as a crime—but as proof conclusive that he is liable to error of judgment on the most solemn occasions; for what occasion could be more solemn than one which involved the lives of six fellow men, for a merely constructive crime, if crime at all? During the whole of the three years of the war, when militia men desiring from camp was the occurrence of every day in almost every state in the Union, no other instance occurred of a militia man's being shot.
The case at Mobile stands by itself; and it ever stand alone! In that case not one, but six men were shot, and that too not for deserting posts, nor for going over to the enemy, but for going home when officers of rank informed them that their legal time of service had expired. We do not mean, however, to dwell on this case; for, in truth, being as little able Mr. Madison was to look on blood and carnage with composure, we have no pleasure in contemplating it.

The regular reader of this paper may recollect that we stated, some time ago, when the proceedings of this court martial could not be found in the War Department, that we had good authority for saying that President Madison had, when they were first received, directed these proceedings to be returned to Tennessee.
Our informant on this head had a better right to know how they were disposed of than perhaps any other individual whatever. We are not yet certain that his information to us was not correct; for, though returned to Tennessee at that time, they might have travelled back to Washington under the General Order, issued after the war, which called for the transmission to the War Office of all records, &c. connected with the service, and thus found entrance where they were originally refused, or, the copy of the proceedings now found may be the duplicate of that returned; the probability of which supposition is confirmed by the publication on the subject which was some time ago made by the Nashville Committee: for, in their exposition of the matter, the Committee publish certain extracts from the proceedings of that Court, which Mr. Donelson (a relative, we believe, of Gen. Jackson), certifies, "are correctly copied from the original proceedings of the Court," which he says were put into his hands, about two years before, by Col. Butler, late Adjutant General of the Southern division, on his removal to Florida. If the original proceedings were still in the hands of General Jackson's friends in Tennessee, it was of course no cause of surprise that they should not be found in the Department of War; and from the accidental finding of a copy of them, there is no proof that the other and original copy was not returned to Tennessee, in the manner already stated, by the order of Mr.
Madison.

Still, however, there is a possibility that the memory of our informant might have deceived him; and it may be of some other Court Martial that the original proceedings were returned to Tennessee. We gave our information as we received it, and if there be any thing wrong in it, will cheerfully correct it. That some Proceedings of Courts Martial actually were returned to Tennessee, we have no doubt; and if they were not those of the celebrated Court held at Mobile, we should be glad to know what they were. If we are not informed by correspondents, there are some very curious documents of that sort to be found in that quarter of the country, which the "original proceedings" came from.

Extract from the Review of Scott's Napoleon in the last number of the Christian Examiner.

We have spoken of the energies of mind called forth by war. If we may be allowed a short digression, which, however, bears directly on our main subject, the merits of Napoleon, we would observe that military talent, even of the highest order, is far from holding the first place among intellectual endowments. It is one of the lower forms of genius—for it is not conversant with the highest and richest objects of thought. We grant that a mind, which takes in a wide country, at a glance, and understands almost by intuition the positions it affords for a successful campaign, is a comprehensive and vigorous one. The general who disposes his forces so as to counteract a greater force; who supplies by skill, science, and genius, the want of numbers; who dives into the counsels of his enemy, and who gives unity, energy and success to a vast sphere of operations, in the midst of casualties and obstructions which no wisdom could foresee, manifests great power. But still the chief work of a general is to apply physical obstructions to avail himself of physical aids and advantages; to act on matter; to overcome rivers, ramparts, mountains and human muscles; and these are not the highest objects of mind, nor do they demand intelligence of the highest order; and accordingly nothing is more common to find men, eminent in this department, who are almost wholly wanting in the noblest energies of the soul; in imagination and taste, in the capacity of enjoying works of genius—in large views of human nature, in the moral sciences, in the application of analysis and generalization to the human mind and to society, and in original conceptions on the great subjects which have absorbed the most glorious understandings. The office of a great general does not differ widely from that of a great mechanic, whose business it is to frame new combinations of physical forces, to adapt them to new circumstances, and to remove new obstructions. Accordingly, great generals, away from the camp, are commonly no greater men than the mechanic taken from his workshop. In conversation they are often dull. Works of profound thinking on general and great topics they cannot comprehend. The conqueror of Napoleon, the hero of Waterloo, undoubtedly possesses great military talents; but we never heard of his eloquence in the Senate, or of his sagacity in the cabinet; and we venture to say, that he will leave the world, without adding one new thought on the great themes, on which the genius of philosophy and legi-lature has meditated for ages. We will not go down for illustration to such men as Nelson, a man great on the deck, but debased by gross vices, and who never pretended to enlargement of intellect. To institute a comparison in point of talent and genius between such men and Milton, Bacon and Shakespeare, is almost an insult on these illustrious names. Who can think of these truly great intelligences; of the range of their minds through heaven and earth; of their new and glowing combinations of thought; of the energy with which they grasped and subjected to their main purpose, the infinite materials of illustration which nature and life afford; who can think of the forms of transcendent beauty and grandeur which they created, or which were rather emanations of their own minds, of the impetuous imagination which they have exerted over so many generations, and which time only extends and makes sure; of the voice of power, in which, though dead, they still speak to nations, and awaken intellect, sensibility, and genius in both hemispheres; who can think of such men, and not feel the immense inferiority of the most gifted warrior, whose elements of thought are physical forces and physical obstructions, and whose employment is the combination of the lowest class of objects, on which a powerful mind can be employed."
