DIGNITY OF MECHANIC ARTS.

If the dignity of things may be measur-ed by their importance to mankind, there is nothing, perhaps, which can rank above the mechanic arts. In fact, they may be called the lever, the fulcrum, and the power which move the world. They do not want the "whereon to stand" of Archimedes : they have a sufficient foundation in themselves.

What gives to civilized nations their su-periority over the savage? It is chiefly the mechanic arts. . By them the beautiful and convenient mansion is substituted for the rude and uncomfortable wigwam; and scarlet and fine twined linen supply the wardrobe, in place of the skins of wild animals. They are the foundation of nearly all the improvements and the comforts of life-and further, we may say, of the glory and grandeur of the world. By them, the farmer ploughs the land, and by them, the mariner ploughs the ocean; by them, the monarch is adorned with his crown, and by them, the peasant is clad in comfort ble garments; by them, the triumphat arch is raised to the hero, and by them the temple ascends to the Deity; by them the wealthy roll in chariots, and loll on couches; by them the sword is polished, and the axe is tempered ; by them the table is spread, and the bed is decked, and the parlour furnished. To them the poet owes the perpetuation of his fame, and the warrior the evergreen of his laurels; by them Homer sings, and Casar triumphs in all ages. Through them we are instructed by the wisdom of Plato, and charmed by the eloquence of Cicero; through them we admire the justice of Aristides, and the heroism of Leonidas.

And much of this owing to two single arts, that of printing and the manufacture of paper. By the former, learning has been rescued from the gloom of the dark ages; but without the latter, the benefits of printing would be circumscribed to very narrow bounds. It is by means of the press, chiefly, that so much of christendom owes its escape from the thraldom of superstition; and it is to the same means that we Americans owe our free and enlightened institutions. To these means, which originated in a few rude types carved on a block of wood, is owing the present wonderful diffusion of knowledge, which distinguishes this from all former ages. But whether a book be printed on paper, and sold for a dollar, or laboriously written on parchment and sold for a thousand, it is still to a mechanic art that the world is, and has been indebted for the transmission and diffusion of light through the means of books-whether the rays of that light shine upon few persons or many.

But in speaking of the dignity of mechanic arts, we would not confine them to

But it is not expected, nor is it desirable, that every mechanic should add his name to the list of inventors, for which our country, and especially New-England is distinguished. Without this he may become useful, respectable, and even distinguished in his trade. But in order to attain his reputation, the attention of the head is requisite to understand, as well as the hand to labour.

The mechanic who perfectly understands his trade, as well in the principles as the practice of it, gets himself a degree of no inconsiderable rank and honor, and that without the intervention of a college, or the formal vote of a learned corporation. He is a least a Master of Arts-of one art -while it is possible that the man who has the degree of A. M. conferred upon him, with all collegiate ceremony, in the venerable gravity of a dead language, and is called Master of Arts-the plural number -it is possible, we say, that such an one may, after all, not be the thorough master of one art, either, polite, humane oruseful. To become an ingenious and enlightened mechanic, it is necessary that a youth who is destined for trade, should bring to his employment a mind inquisitive, studious, busy, and inclined to mechanic pursuits. Such a mind, with ordinary attention to its cultivation, can scarcely fail of becoming, in a very considerable degree, enlightened. But to the common sourcesof information, a great many mechanics add a very laudable attention to books, to the periodical publications of the day, and to associations for mutual improvement. Mechanics' and Apprentices' Libraries are established in many of our large towns, and Mechanic Societies are formed, which by inducing studious habits, an interchange of ideas, & a collission of sentiments, must tend to improve the minds of the members in a high degree. There is, in fact, at the present time, a very large share of information and solid practical science among the mechanics of this country.

The life of the mechanic, it is true, is life of labour, and while he wipes the sweat from his brow, he may, perhaps. murmur at his fate, and envy what he considers the easy lot of other professions .-But where is the business which exempts a man from a life of labor? The life of merchants, of physicians, of judges, of the first officers under Government, and even of the United States President himself. is a life of labor. But can these 'honorable men' make a throstle, or build a ship, or raise a spire to heaven ?--or exercise has now received, are, Fashionable Bonnets, its branches, & who vouches to give satisfaction to all, or any of the arts which add so much to the comfort and grandeur of the world? These the mechanic can do; and if he duly reflects on the importance of his labors, he can scarcely repine at his lot.
