From the Boston Philanthropist.

We have before us an Address delivered by the Rev. Mr. Knowles in the first Baptist Church in Salem street, at the religious celebration of the Fourth instant. It is an able and finished production; and treats upon subjects of vital importance to the interests of our country, and which cannot be too deeply impressed upon the mind and heart of the American citizen.
Our limits compel us to be brief; and we must content ourselves, for the present, with a single extract, which although perhaps of less importance and merit than many others, better answers our purpose at this time.

Mr. K. after alluding to other causes which may tend to endanger the stability of our government, thus delicately touches upon the Presidential Question:

"Here then, is opened a wide arena, filled with eager competitors. If the contest were maintained with proper weapons, and if, after the decision were made, the unsuccessful candidates would calmly and respectfully acquiesce in the result, the competition might be a benefit to the public interests. But a little knowledge of the passions of men is sufficient to show us, that this temperate spirit and this calm acquiescence are not to be expected. Ambitious and selfish men will employ all their influence to attain their ends. They will resort to unjustifiable means. Malice and slander will be employed to injure the fame of their rivals; the interests of the electors will be appealed to, and their passions inflamed by all the arts which unprincipled intrigue can devise and execute.
By means like these, incompetent and bad men may force themselves into power. If they fail of success, they will vilify their opponents, impeach their conduct, misrepresent their measures, obstruct, as much as possible, the execution of their duties, and endeavor to withdraw from them the public confidence and support.
The tranquility of the community is thus disturbed, the purity of elections stained, the respectability and influence of official stations diminished, and men of sterling worth excluded from office, because they have too much modesty and self respect to expose themselves to the assaults of cal-lanny, and too much principle to resort to the base methods by which others would gain rise to power.

This furious contest for office will increase with the advance of our population, because there is necessarily a great increase of the number of needy competitors for posts of emolument. The number of these is already very great. There is no office, however inconsiderable, which is not eagerly sought. Persons of this class, too, are usually ready to join the standard of any political party which promises to reward them. Their selfishness is the only impulse to action; and they regard not their country's welfare, if they can secure their own ends. They care not who fills the higher offices of the State, if they can make the election of one individual rather than another, subservient to their own interests; just as the Pretorian bands of Rome bestowed the Imperial purple on him who would distribute among them the most liberal donations.

As we approach the highest office in the nation, the contest becomes more fierce, because the prize is more valuable, and the elections less frequent. The Presidency, as we all know, has repeatedly been the object of embittered competition; and it is probably destined to occasion a more tremendous struggle than has ever yet shaken this nation. On this delicate subject, it is not my design to express an opinion, in relation to either of the contending parties. But every lover of his country who wishes for her peace, honour and prosperity, must look with alarm and sorrow on some of the signs of the times. The clouds are gathering—the dark ocean is heaving —the elements are in fearful and ominous commotion—every thing bodes a storm—and if there ever was a time when the patriot ought to pray for his country, it is now. There is an excited feeling throughout the nation—men look fiercely at each other —unsparing censures and invectives are hurled against the most distinguished men of the nation. Whatever may be the event of the approaching election, the violence which has attended it, is surely sufficient to awaken our fears for the future. There is more danger, perhaps, to be apprehended from contentions for the office of President, than from any thing else in our system. Almost all civil wars have sprung from rival strife for the chief magistracy; and our country will be happy indeed if she shall escape the fate which has befallen so many other nations. There is no thing chimerical in the fear, that some bold, artful man, by the aid of a temporary popularity, and of unprincipled partizans, who will assist him, that he may provide for them, may force his way to the Presidential chair; or it may be, that some such man, enraged by defeat, and artfully appealing to political animosities and sectional prejudices, may raise the standard of civil war, and collecting around him the worthless, the factious and the deluded, may plunge his parrioidal sword into the bosom of his country. This is not an imaginary danger. This country has already had a fearful warning on this point.

The treasonable design of Aaron Burr originated in his resentment for failure to reach the highest office of the nation. It is dreadful to think of so disastrous a termination of this fair experiment—of such a downfall of this glorious republic. But to such a result it will certainly arrive, unless a better spirit pervade the land than that which seems now to predominate in many hearts."

SHOPPING.

Going a-shopping is one of the most serious occupations that a young lady has got. It is a sort of exhibition. I went a-shopping the other day with a third cousin of mine who touched twenty-eight last Saturday, to my certain knowledge, but who still looks the amiable as much as if she were only sixteen. She told me she wanted to look at some silk goods, but hang me if I could ever find out what particular kind she desired. I observed in my peregrinations, that she always went into those stores which had the most customers.— She would ask to look at a piece of ribbon, then leave that for a piece of muslin, or any thing else on the counter. In the interval she looked four times into the ha-berdasher's mirror, told a few anecdotes of the last water party—and said she spent a dull week in Trenton, and was buried alive in Catskill—"or rather," said she, looking innocently, "I was like Percival's piece of ice on the top of the Pine Orchard, that urned into a smiling face and broken heart." "Oh! certainly," said I, "ice enough, I'll warrant you." I observe that all the shop keepers look grim whenever my cousin makes her appearance.

INDIAN OBSERVATION.

It would be a pity not to preserve the following anecdote, which displays so much of that accuracy of observation which is known to be the characteristic of our red brethren of the West.—An Indian upon his return home, to his hut one day, discovered that his venison which had been hung up to dry, had been stolen. After going some distance he met some persons of whom he inquired, if they had not seen a little, old white man, with a short gun, and accompanied by a small dog with a bob-tail? They replied in the affirmative, and upon the Indian assuring them that the man thus described had stolen his venison, they desired to be informed how he was able to give such a minute description of a person whom he had not seen. The Indian answered thus:—"The thief I know is a little man, by his having made a pile of stones, to stand on in order to reach the venison from the height I hung it, standing on the ground;—that he is an old man, I know by his short steps, which I have traced over the dead leaves in the woods; and that he is a white man, I know by his turning out his toes when he walks, which an Indian never does. His gun I know to be short, by the mark which the muzzle made by rubbing the bark of the tree on which it leaned;—that his dog is small, I know by his tracks, and that he has a bobtail, I discovered by the mark it made in the dust where he was sitting at the time his master was taking down the meat."

THE WAY TO WEALTH.

The property acquired by the late Mr.
Courtis, the rich banker, was the produce of a long life of honest industry, and strict attention to business; in this, perhaps, he had few equals. On one occasion when a gentleman, who had been one of his school-fellows, came to town, Mr. Courtis invited him to dinner; and a large party was assembled to do him honor. The next day the gentleman had some business to transact at Mr. Courtis's banking house, when there was a penny in change due to Mr.
Courtis. "Well," said the gentleman, "I shall not give you that." "I must have it," said Mr. Courtis. "Why," said his astonished guest, "how singular is this! Yesterday you gave me a dinner which must have cost £100; and to-day, you will not give me a penny!" "True," replied Mr. Courtis; "and it is my being rigidly correct, with matters of business, that enabled me to give you a dinner." Her late Majesty, Queen Charlotte, who kept cash with Mr.
Courtis, sent notice that she should withdraw it in three days. Mr. Courtis sent an answer, presenting his humble duty, and assuring her Majesty, "that to withdraw half a million of money from the house of Thomas Courtis & Co. three hours notice was all that was necessary." It is almost superfluous to add, her Majesty, after this communication from the principal, did not withdraw her confidence.

FIRST CALL.

At the request of the Orphan Chamber of the City of St. Gall, and by order of the Circuit Court of that City, Public Notice is hereby given to the Heirs and Descendants of David Zublin, son of Ambrosius, deceased, in the year 1740, and namely to those of his two deceased sons David and Jacob Zublin, formerly living in Pennsylvania and Carolina, and from whom since thirty-eight years nothing has been heard,

FOR THE FIRST TIME, they are therefore summoned to appear on the 1st of July of the present year before the President of the Circuit Court of St. Gall, in this City, either personally or to accompany their claims with credible proof of their being relations or descendants of the aforementioned persons, and also of their present place of residence, to enable the Orphan Chamber to distribute the remaining property of the above mentioned deceased, now in their possession, to such person or persons whose claims entitle them to the property in question.

ABOUT a fortnight since, a negro man named A Willis, commonly called Willis Falconer.
He is of common size, about 23 or 24 years old, and has one eye injured, which can only be discovered by close examination. His occupation is that of a ditcher; he has worked for the last three or four years in the neighborhood of Raleigh, where his wife, a free woman, lives. It is supposed he is now at work near Raleigh or Pittsburgh, Chatham County. A reward of ten dollars will be given for his delivery to me in Granville, or five dollars for securing him in jail so that I get him again.
