James's Anti-Dyspeptic Pills.

DYSPEPSIA has of late become so frequent, and is so well known, that it is considered unnecessary to describe minutely its characteristic symptoms. The most prominent, however, and some or all of which will at once be recognized by every dyspeptic, are flatulency, acid stomach, occasional nausea in the morning, and bitter taste in the mouth; costiveness, but sometimes diarrhoea and a loose state of the bowels; loss of appetite, or an unnatural craving for food; piles, yellowness of the eyes and skin, uneasiness of the stomach after eating, &c. The above Pills are confidently believed to be a remedy for this formidable disease. They are not recommended on the principle of any mysterious or specific operation; their use is predicated upon a consistent theory of the disease and a thorough knowledge of the physiology of the human system, and the nature of the remedy employed. Their efficacy has been tested by long experience, attended with a degree of success very far beyond the most sanguine expectations of the inventor.
