Wilmington, Sept. 23. Every late account of the injury done to the Crops by the late Storm, opens our views to a greater extent of destruction. The cotton as well as the corn and rice has suffered. The ravages of the elements although more dreaded by the manufacturers of salt, were less injurious to that class of citizens, than to any other whose property was exposed to them. A most unfavorable, we may say, a most adverse season, immediately preceding the storm, had sunk the hopes of the salt-maker for the present year; and bad as his condition was, that calamity had a tendency only to make it worse. Instead of the average crop, we calculate that the saltmaker, will realize about one third. Rec.

The following just and eloquent description of the virtues and independence of the American farmer, is taken from the Address recently delivered to the citizens of Louisville, by the Hon. Mr. Rowan, of Kentucky:

"Who is there among us that beholds the condition of our farmers, and does not exult in the consciousness that he is an American citizen, and pant to superadd the character of farmer? The house of the farmer is the abode of the virtues. It is a school in which lessons of practical wisdom are taught. It is a temple in which the precepts of our holy religion are inculated. It is the castle of sovereignty, for it is owned by its occupant, and he is a freeman. It is the residence of peace, order, harmony and happiness. Patriotism and piety unite in consecrating the place, and in suffusing every countenance with their unction. Indeed, what condition in life is so likely to produce that patriotism, which will stand by the country upon emergencies, or that piety which will afford solace in extremity, as that of the farmer? He occupies a constant, intimate, and sensible relationship with Heaven. His mind is subdued with a love of order, by constantly beholding that which prevails around him. The regular succession of the seasons, of day & night, and of seed time and harvest, admonish him to the observance of regularity and order in his conduct. Steam Boats .- Frequent complaints have been made of the conduct of masters of steam-boats, in landing passengers in small boats without stopping their engines, and thereby endangering their lives. It may be useful to let the public, as well as those who may be more immediately interested, know in what hight this matter is considered by the law. A complaint of this kind was lately brought before the Lord Mayor of London, against a master of a steam-boat, when the facts appeared to be as follows:

The steam-boat was on her passage from Gravesend to London. Being off a landing place the engine was stopped, and a wherry came along side to take out three passengers, who being all in a small boat, the word was given by the man at the gangway, that "all was right," when the master gave word to go on; but immediately perceived that there was some difficulty in getting the wherry clear, he ordered the engine to be stopped, when he found that the waterman in the wherry had fallen overboard. The power of the steam was not again put on the steam-boat until the whole of the party going on shore were safe.

The Lord Mayor did not consider the facts thus sworn to as mitigating the case in the least. The master laid the blame upon the man at the gangway; but the Lord Mayor said, "if the boat had been upset and lives lost, as would in that case certainly have occurred, the master would have been guilty of manslaughter, and have been transported.

The laws of England and this country, on this subject, we presume, are the a few hours previous to her dissolution. same; and if so, the destruction of life | Lately in Warren County, in the 22d year of in this mode, would be considered the same offence here as there. Manslaughter, it would seem, in England, may be punished by transportation to Botany bay. Here we believe, it subjects a person convicted of it to confinement at hard labor in the State Prison. A master of a steam-boat should think seriously before he incurs the risk of such a penalty, for the childish purpose of outsailing a rival vessel. We know very well that this hazard is often incurred in a thoughtless manner, and under excitement. But that does not alter the nature of the offence, nor will it change the mode of punishment. - N. Tecumseh. - In conversation with a gentleman, the other day, about the peculiar traits of Indian character, he related an ancedote of the celebrated Tecumseh, which singularly evinces the sagacity and shrewdness of this warrior, and the manner by which he first acquired that unlimited influence which he possessed over his tribe. It is well known that formerly, the Indians regarded an eclipse, either of the Sun or Moon, as a terribly portentous omen; and whenever one occurred, a council was usually held to ascertain the causes of the wrath of the Great Spirit. At the disastrous defeat of St. Clair, while they were in the eager chase of the unfortunate fugitives, they were thrown the Moon, that the pursuit was stopped, and a consultation held; and so long was ded the shattered remnant of the army to traders were visiting their settlements on the Wabash in the spring of 1806, Tecumsel learned from them that a total eclipse of the Sun would take place on the 16th of June. Knowing the superstition of his people, he dexterously resolved to make use of this information for his own advantage : and accordingly represented to them, that the Great Spirit had constituted him his agent upon earth, and that, if they did not implicitly comply with his directions, the Sun would on a certain day hide his head and withdraw the light of his countenance from them. To their amazement, this prediction was fulfilled; and ever after, they submitted to his dictation with a confidence that was never shaken, until his career was determined.
