A CAMP MEETING.

None but one who has seen, can imagine the interest excited in a district of country, perhaps fifty miles in extent, by the awaited approach of the time for a camp-meeting; and none, but one who has seen, can imagine, how profoundly the preachers have understood what produces effect, and how well they have practised upon it.

Suppose the scene to be, where the most extensive excitement and the most frequent camp-meetings have been for the two past years, in one of the beautiful and fertile valleys among the mountains of Tennessee.
The notice has been circulated two or three months. On the appointed day, coaches, chaises, waggons, carts, people on horseback, and multitudes travelling from a distance on foot, waggons with provisions, mattresses, tents and arrangements for the stay of a week, are seen hurrying from every point, towards the central spot. It is in the midst of a grove of those beautiful and lofty trees, natural to the valleys of the Tennessee, in its deepest verdure, and beside a spring branch, for the requisite supply of water.

The ambitious and wealthy are there, because, in this region, opinion is all powerful; and they are there, either to extend their influence, or that their absence may not be noted, to diminish it. Aspirants for office are there, to electioneer and gain popularity. Vast numbers are there from simple curiosity, and merely to enjoy a spectacle. The young and the beautiful are there, with mixed motives, which it were best not severely to scrutinize. Children are there, their young eyes glistening with the intense interest of eager curiosity.
The middle-aged, fathers and mothers of families, are there, with the sober views of people whose plans in life are fixed, and waiting calmly to hear. Men and women of hoary hairs are there, with such thoughts it may be hoped, as their years invite.
Such is the congregation, consisting of thousands.

A host of preachers of different denominations are there, some in the earnest vigor and aspiring desires of youth, waiting an opportunity for display; others, who have proclaimed the Gospel, as pilgrims of the cross, from the remotest North, of our vast country, to the shores of the Mexican Gulf, and ready to utter the words, the feelings, and the experience, which they have treasured up in a travelling ministry of fifty years, and whose accents, trembling with age, still more impressively than their words, announce that they will soon travel or preach no more on the earth, are there. Such are the preachers.

The line of tents is pitched; and the religious city grows up in a few hours under the trees, beside the stream. Lamps are hung in lines among the branches; and the effect of their glare upon the surrounding forest is, as of magic. The scenery of the most brilliant theatre in the world is a painting only for children, compared with it. Meantime the multitude, with the highest excitement of social feeling, added to the general enthusiasm of expectation, pass from tent to tent, and interchange apostolic greetings and embraces, and talk of the coming solemnities. Their coffee and tea is prepared and their supper is furnished.
By this time the moon, for they take thought to appoint the meeting at the proper time of the moon, begins to show its disk above the dark summits of the mountain; and a few stars are seen glimmering through the intervals of the branches. The whole constitutes a temple worthy of the grandeur of Gothic. An old man in a dress of the quaint-est simplicity, ascends a platform, wipes the dust from his spectacles, and in a voice of suppressed emotion, gives out the hymn of which the whole assembled multitude can recite the words—and an air in which every voice can join. We should deem poorly of the heart, that would not thrill, as the song is heard, like the "sound of many waters" echoing among the hills and mountains. Such are the scenes, the associations, and such the influence of external things upon a nature so so farfully and wonderfully constituted, as ours, that little effort is necessary on such a theme as religion, urged at such a place, under such circumstances, to fill the heart and the eyes. The hoary orator talks of God, of eternity, a judgment to come, and all that is impressive beyond. He speaks of his "experiences," his toils and travels, his persecutions and welcomes, and how many he has seen in hope, in peace and triumph, gathered to their fathers; and when he speaks of the short space that remains to him, his only regret is that he can no more proclaim, in the silence of death, the mercies of his crucified Redeemer.

There is no need of the studied trick of oratory, to produce in such a place the deepest movements of the heart. No wonder, as the speaker pauses to dash the gathering moisture from his own eye, that his audience are dissolved in tears, or uttering the exclamations of penitence. Nor is it wonderful, that many who prized themselves on an estimation of higher intellect, and a nobler insensibility, than the crowd, catch the infectious feeling, and become women and children in their turn; and though they "come to scoff, remain to pray"—Flint's Geography of the Western States.

SCIENTIFIC ROMANCING.

If you call botany beautiful, and astronomy sublime, I call geology romantic, because it not only leads us to travel among the wildest scenery of nature, but carries the imagination back to the birth and infancy of our little planet, and follows its history of deluges, and hurricanes, and earthquakes, which have left us numerous traces of their devastations. Would you not think it romantic to travel, as must be done by the geological engineer, among mountains and valleys, where the tempests have bared & shattered the hardest rocks, and where alternate rains and frosts are crumbling the solid materials of mountains, while the springs and rivers wash away the fragments, to deposit them again in the various stages of their course? And would you not think it romantic to dream about the young world, emerging from darkness, and rejoicing in the first dawn of created light? To think of the building of mountains, the hollowing out of valleys, and the gathering together of the great waters of the ocean? And will it not be romantic to discover the traces of the ancient world before the time of Noah, in every hill and valley you examine?—Conversations on Geology.

POWER.

I do not look upon power as a thing to be envied by any wise or good man. Power in itself—mere power—is any thing rather than (I fear) a friend to virtue, or a test of merit. It is enjoyed by right of birth; it is inherited by bloated despots; it is purchased, through blood and slaughter, by ferocious warriors and pestilential conquerors; it is held by the tenure of the very devils that reduce men lower than their kind; by the miserable inmates of an eastern seraglio. But power to be of use to mankind—the power of doing good to our country—the opportunity of scattering blessings over the land of our birth or of our adoption—the power to enable you to root out ignorance, to diffuse the lights of knowledge, to break the chains of enslavement, of whatever color, of whatever sect they may be—power to benefit our land, and to illustrate our country, and to ennoble our age, and to amend our race—this is a power which a man, which an angel might stoop from his height to take up.
