MISCELLANY.

In a debate in the Massachusetts legislature on an amendment to the Constitution, proposing to reduce the number of the Members of the House of Representatives, a Mr. Hobart, of even into the State of South-Carolina ; & Leicester, undertook to ridicule the population of Boston, calling them a set of "printet, book-bindets, barbers, coblers, tailors and tinkers, moving here and there without any permanent places of abode." Mr. Baylies, | could appropriate the benefits of his eneof Faunton, replied in the following happy my's victories to his own use, and triumph manner :

" I have had some experience in legisla-|quest. His name was Nathaniel Greene, tion, having held a seat in different legislative bodies for ten years ; I have listened to many legislative debates, and I have heard many extraordinary speeches, but 1 glory-a here and a patriot. I will now take the gentleman to Gerconfess the most extraordinary was the one which was made by the gentleman many; and as he has disclosed to us that from Leicester yesterday. Is that gentleman aware of the character of his proposi- ful quotations and allusions, I will shew tion? Vestal & others. mendment to the constitution, he advocates possibly have never seen a bible. I mean, the establishment of a principle which would tolerate a real, bona fide aristocracy. He has gravely urged upon this assembly the propriety of giving to one class of our citizens greater civil privileges than are allowed to the other classes. If his propat the expense of the others, and those thus favored become virtually an aristocracy, for it is not titles which constitute an aristocracy but privileges. He would deny an equality of rights and privileges to the printers, bookbinders, clockmakers, blacksmiths, coblers, tailors, barbers and tinkers, or in other words, the mechanics of our State, on whom he has lavished his success, and whom he endeavors to cover with contempt. He speaks of them "birds of passage," " moving planets," as devoid both of patriotism and of local attachments, as men without a home, who hang on society as incumbrance-, and he has placed them in humiliating contrast with the cultivators of the soil, to which class he complacently tells us he belongs. Sir, there are none who cherish a more sincere respect for the yeomapry-the farmers of Massachuserts than myself. know their worth-I know their virtues-I would give them their full share of civil and political privileges, but I would give them no more, and if I understand their feelings, they would ask no more. I am certain that they would never contend for more than an equality of privileges, and I believe them to be the last who would undertake to wrest from their neighbors one in the world. tittle of their right. The gentleman from Leicester has call ed up his revolutionary reminiscences, and has told us of his personal knowledge of the patriots and heroes who composed the glorious band of revolutionary chiefs, the men who were engaged in the noblest enterprise of modern times. But, sir, I can tell that gentleman that it is not amongst the green hills of the county of Worcester dwelt in aucient times a man, whose name that he can look for those daring spirits who gave the first impulse which resulted in that mighty event. In two little rooms in this city were assembled the men who devised the project of emancipating a nation-the pioneers of the American revolution were the mechanics of Boston. I their meetings they deliberated on the highest objects of human concernment-a nation's rights, and having ascertained the the shapes of his humor, given a new and strength of the foundation, they had no graceful dignity to the humblest of the dread of the issue, and courted the conflici. I can transport the gentleman to another place-the Carpenter's Hall in the city of Philadelphia. In that place, on a day pathos, and impressed upon sublimity itmemorable in our annals, the fourth day of July, 1776, a deed was done which has no sir-he was a mighty enchanter, who could parallel. On that day, in that place, was assembled the most august political body that ever deliberated on a nation's destiny. Five men had been selected as the elite of that assembly : the greatest amongst the great-to prepare the manifesto of a nation's rights-of a nation's wrongs. mongst them was a man by the name of Be jamin Franklin (the gentleman from Leicester in his multifarious reading may have read of him ;) a man mighty amongst the sons of men, who by common consent stood at the head of the philosophers of America and Europe, whose deep investigations into the secrets of nature had given him the knowledge of her subtlest, most mysterious, most tremendous, most destructive agent, which he disarmed of its power. Yes sir, he played with the torked lightnings as with a tamed snake, and yet the elements of that marvellous wisdom which enlightened and astomshed the world were gathered in a Printer's office, and this great man was a Printer.

But I can tell the jentleman that this trade humble as it is, was once practised by a mighty genius, who invented an improvement in the machinery of spinning cotton, which has not only laid the foundation of some of the most magnificent fortunes in America-which has not only filled our country with wealth, but which like the touch of the enchanter's wand, has concentrated the treasures of the world in the island of Great Britain .--I mean Richard Arkwright, by the courtesy of England, Sir Richard-a man who by the force of his genius translated him self from a barber's shop to the British Parliament, and to a place amongst the proud knights of the proudest aristocracy

The genius of these three mechanics, Brindley, Watt and Arkwright, upheld the sinking fortunes of England, and placed her on that high eminence from which she overlooks the world.

PROSPECTUS OF THE WASHINGTON TIMES

THE TIMES will be conducted on libera principles and devoted to the extension of general knowledge.

The subscriber has been fortunate enough to engage the assistance of several Gentlemen hig literary attainments as contributors to his columns, and he feels an assurance, that with their able cooperation, and his dwn assiduous attention to the duties of his office, he can present such a paper to the public, as will merit their patronage.

Religion, and the sublime doctrines of Chris. tiamty, will always find in us a warm and untire ing advocate ; not the partizan of a particular creed, but the friend of all, whose faith is founded on the everlasting basis of Redemption ; enemies to intolerance, we extend the hand of fel-lowship, and the mantle of Charity, to all God's People.

For the lover of elegant literature, we promise to cater largely : Romance and Poesy shall be laid under contribution, and frequent forays made into the in effectual wold to call the choicest fruits and flowers for his banquet.

The Philosophical and Scientific, shall have our best exertions to furnish them with an occasional repast suited to their several tas'es; and our unwearied efforts shall always be directed to suit every class of the reading community, by a judicious selection of interesting matter.

To those all absorbing and important inter ests, Agriculture and Commerce, much of our time will be devoted ; to the first, we promise a true state of the markets and the improvements in culture ; to the other, a correct Shipping list and Price Current.

In Politics, the Times will enlist under no banner, nor support any set of men, or measures, (fas aut nefas.) The Editor is determined to steer his bark clear of the political vortex in which so many of his brethren are drawn, and to retain the vantage ground which he now possesses, of looking calmh on passing events and Willie M.
