ELOQUENCE OF PATRICK HENRY.

Hook was a Scotchman, a man of wealth, and suspected of being unfriendly to the American cause. During the distresses of the American Army, consequent on the joint invasion of Cornwallis and Phillips, in 1781, a Mr. Venable, an army commissary, had taken two of Hook's steers for the use of the troops.—The act had not been strictly legal; and on the establishment of peace, Hook, on the advice of Mr.
Cowan, a gentleman of some distinction in the law, thought proper to bring an action of trespass against Mr. Venable, in the District Court of New-London. Mr. Henry appeared for the defendant, and is said to have deposed himself in this cause to the infinitive enjoyment of his hearers, the unfortunate Hook always excepted. After Mr. Henry became animated in the cause, says a correspondent, he appeared to have complete control over the passions of the audience. At one time he excited their indignation against Hook—vengeance was visible in every countenance. Again, when he chose to relax, and ridicule him, the whole audience was in an uproar of laughter. He painted the distress of the American army, exposed almost naked to the rigor of a winter's sky, and marking the frozen ground over which they trod, with the blood of their unshod feet. Where was the man, who had an American heart in his bosom, who would not have thrown open his fields, his barn, his cellars, the doors of his house, and the portals of his breast, to have received with open arms the meanest soldier in that little band of Patriots?
Where is the man? There he stands—but whatever of the heart of the American beats in his bosom, you, gentlemen, are to be the judge. He carried the jury, by the power of his imagination, to the plains around York, the surrender of which had followed shortly after the act complained of. He depicted the surrender in the most glowing and noble colors. The audience saw before their eyes the humiliation and dejection of the British as they marched out of their trenches. They saw the triumph which lighted up every patriot's face, and heard the shouts of victory, and the cry of "Washington and Liberty," as it rang and echoed through the American ranks, and was reverberated from the hills and shores of the neighboring river—"but hark! What notes of discord are those, which disturb the general joy, and silence the acclamation of victory? They are the notes of John Hook, hoarsely bawling thro' the American camp, "beef! beef!"

The whole audience were convulsed. A particular incident will give a better idea of the effect, than any general description.
The clerk of the court unable to command himself, & unwilling to commit any breach of decorum in his place, rushed out of the courtroom and threw himself upon the grass, in the most violent paroxysms of laughter, where he was rolling, when Hook, with very different feelings, came out for relief in the yard also. "Jimmy Steptoe" said he to the clerk, "what the devil ails ye, mon?" Mr. Steptoe could only say that he could not help it. "Never mind ye," said Hook, "wait till Billy Cowan gets up; he'll show him the la!" Mr.
Cowan, however, was so completely overwhelmed by the torrent which bore upon his client, that when he rose to reply to Mr. Henry, he was scarcely able to make an intelligible or audible remark. The cause was decided almost by acclamation. The jury retired for form's sake, and instantly returned with a verdict for the defendant.
Nor did the effect of Mr. Henry's speech stop here. The people were so highly excited by the tory audacity of such a suit, that Hook began to hear around him a cry more terrible than that of beef—it was the cry of tar and feathers—from the application of which, it is said, nothing saved him but a precipitate flight and the speed of his horse.—American Common Place Book.

Cowper, the Minstrel of Christianity.

With sincerest pleasure and liveliest joy we contemplate a man whose name will be venerated as long as virtue remains on earth. The warrior may point us to his Bonaparte or Alexander—the statesman may show his Machiavel or his Mazarin—and perverted genius may hold up to view her Paine, or her Voltaire—but we will rest content with the humble yet far more endearing qualities that distinguished Cowper, the Minstrel of Christianity. The laurels that bloomed around his brow were sustained with blood—the congratulations that filled his ears were mingled with the groans of his fellow-mortals—and the feelings which animated his bosom, were all wa-pure and blameless. He dreamt not of ambition—his ambition was in uprightness to pursue the "noiseless tenor of his way," and to leave behind him an honest and honorable reputation. Fame he coveted not —his was the mind that wanted little, and wished not for more. Though endowed with powers that could have rocked earth to its centre—which could have purchased an infamous and painful immortality, he chose to make a right use of his gifts—and by his proper culture to testify his gratitude to his God and Creator.

Unlike Rochester and Byron, and Shelley, his pen was consecrated to the celebration of what was good—and vice received from him her sharpest rebuke. He disdained to wield his lance against the power that put that lance in his hand, and his virtuous conduct has gained him all that he wanted—the meed of applause from good men. His memory has never been execrated—neither his contemporaries nor posterity have tarnished it—and when others, now honored beyond their deserts, shall have faded into oblivion, his name will stand a proud memorial to succeeding ages of the probity that dwelt within the breast of genius in the 19th century.

We really conceive, that Dr. Johnson has done service not only to the poet's friends but to the world, in presenting these mementos to its eager gaze. We have so long been accustomed to see talent prostituted to the worst purposes—ability and immorality hand in hand—that evidences like these of worth and capacity united, have done our hearts good, and set us more at peace with the character of the age. Cowper is one of the few poets of our time, who to a fine imagination has united a sound judgment—who has seen through the fallacy of the assertion that 'Christianity is no religion for a poet,' and has proved that it opens new sources of inspiration, unknown to him who carps and scoffs at divine things.
With sound sense and cultivated taste he has roamed through the field of the muses and culled their choicest flowers—he has wreathed the bays around his head, and claimed the chaplet from the rosy Niue.— He has wandered amid the sequestered retreat of Parnassus—and by the side of Helicon, has communed with Homer and with Virgil—bid Horace strike a mournful Pleasure on his harp, and listened to old Pin-dar as he soared 'sublime on Fancy's wing.'

We confess (no matter how unfashionable it may be now) that we entertain the highest respect for our poet. To be sure he is no Don Juan—no fashionable rake—but he is, what we value above all the applause of a wretched world, an honest and virtuous man. We will not pretend to prove Cowper a man of genius—(an attribute, by the way, which his enemies have denied him)—for we see it in every line—we shall merely content ourselves with saying, that even if he had not been a man of the most exalted powers the good use to which he put the powers he had, entitles him to the highest credit. His is not the meteor's glare—it is the steady light of the pure and refugent star. We can never be tired of hearing news about such a man—of seeing more of him—of penetrating into his domestic privacy, and profiting by his glorious example. His memory will long hallow the spot where he lived, and England ever mention, with proudest exultation, the name of Cowper.

THE TURKS.

Taken en masse, the Turks are the finest looking race of men in the world; their oval heads, arching brows, jetty eyes, and aquiline noses, their lofty figures and stately mien, are all set off to full advantage by their ample robes and graceful turbans; all is ease and proportion about a Turk; there are no angles or straight lines in his features or person; in all we find the pure curve of manly beauty and majestic grace. It is inconceivable what a miserable figure an Englishman or European makes beside him; his black unmeaning hat, harlequin pantalons, and straight cut coat, (which will one day puzzle those of posterity who shall be antiquaries in costume,) contrast so villainously with the picturesque head-dress, ample trowsers, and floating pelisse of the Ottoman, whilst his glossy beard flings contempt on the effeminate chin of the clipped and docked European. His arms, for "in the East all arm," usually consist of a pair of superbly chased pistols, stuck in a silken sash; a yataghan, with a jewelled handle; a larger and more clumsy knife, called a hanjar, and cymetar swinging in a scabbard, covered with green or crimson velvet, (as the owner, being an Emir or otherwise, is entitled to carry it,) and ornamented with the bases of gold. The latter is, in general, the most important and valuable portion of his arms; or even of his property. I have seen some blades which were valued at 2000 or 3000 dollars; and many are said to be worth triple that sum; they all retain the name of Dimascus, though it is by no means likely that they have been manufactured there.
The twisting and intermingling of the fibres of the metal are considered as the tests of excellence, but I have never seen any possessed of the perfume said to be incorporated with the steel in the real Dimascus sabres.

On the blade of each is usually inscribed a verse from the Koran, either sunk in the steel, or set in letters of gold. The same custom is likewise observed by the Al-banians and by the Greeks, the lines on the swords of Kontoghiani, the Kleft being often copied on the sabres of his descendants.

To him who dreads no tyrant's frown, Who treats the earth its free-born lord, Whose life is glory and renown,
To him be Kontoghiani's sword.

Gold Mines, Lands, Negroes, &c.

THE Subscriber wishing to remove from the neighborhood, offers for sale his valuable Plantation, four miles west of Charlotte. The tract contains 282 acres of land, a large part of which is as good as any in Mecklenburg county; about 100 acres are first, second and third crop ground, of the best quality. The plantation nearly adjoins the celebrated Capps' Gold Mine, and the opinion seems to be well founded that Gold abounds in two hills particularly on the plantation; a branch runs through it for  $\frac{1}{2}$  of a mile, which, it is thought by men of judgment is as rich in the precious metal as any of the Burke Mines. There is also on the plantation good Water Power, and an excellent Mill-Site for mining operations, also a Dwellinghouse, two Barns, Stables & other necessary out-buildings.
Also, 20 or 25 likely young Negroes for sale or a part of them, such as may not wish to follow me.
