From the Legend of Sleepy Hollow.

On a fine autumnal morning, Ichabod, in a pensive mood, sat enthroned on a lofty stool, from whence he usually watched all the concerns of his little literary realm. In his hand he swayed a ferule, that sceptre of despotic power; the birch of justice reposed on three nails behind the throne, a constant terror to evil doers; while on the desk before him might be seen sundry contraband articles and prohibited weapons, detected upon the persons of idle urchins; such as half-munched apples, popguns, whirlygigs, flycages, and whole legions of rampant little paper gamecocks. Apparently there had been some net of justice recently inflicted; for his scholars were all busily intent upon their books, or slyly whispering behind them, with one eye kept upon the master; and a kind of buzzing stillness reigned throughout the school-room. It was suddenly interrupted by the appearance of a negro in tow cloth jackets and trousers, a round crowned fragment of a hat, like the cap of Mercury, and mounted on a ragged, wild, half-broken coil, which he managed with a rope, by way of halter. He came clattering up to the school door, with an invitation to Ichabod to attend a merry-making, or 'spouting frolic,' to be held that evening at Mr. Van Tassel's; and having delivered his message with an air of importance, and effort of fine language, which a negro is apt to display on petty embassies of the kind, he dashed over the brook, and was seen scampering away up the hollow, full of the importance and hurry of his mission.

All was now bustle and hubbub in the late quiet school-room. The scholars were hurried through their lessons without stopping at trifles; those who were nimble skipped over half with impunity, and those who were tardy had a smart application now and then in the rear, to quicken their speed, or help them over a tall word. Books were thrown aside without being put away on the shelves; inkstands were overturned, benches thrown down, and the whole school was turned loose an hour before the usual time; bursting forth like a legion of young imps, yelping and racketing about the green, in joy at their early emancipation.

The gallant Ichabod now spent at least an extra half-hour at his toilet, brushing and refurbishing up his best, and indeed only, suit of rusty black, and arranging his locks by a bit of broken looking-glass, that hung up in the school house. That he might make his appearance before his mistress in the true spirit of a cavalier, he borrowed a horse from the farmer with whom he was domiciliated, a choleric old Dutchman, of the name of Hans Van Ripper, and, thus gallantly mounted, issued forth like a knight errant in quest of adventures. But it is fit that I should, in the true spirit of a romantic story, give some account of the looks and equipments of my hero and his steed. The animal he borrowed was a broken-down plough-horse, that had outlived almost every thing but his viciousness. He was gaunt and shagged, with an ewe neck, and a head like a hammer; his rusty mane and tail were tangled and knotted with burrs; one eye had lost its pupil, and was glaring and spectral, but the other had the gleam of a genuine devil in it. Still he must have had fire and mettle in his day, if we may judge from his name, which was Gunpowder. He had, in fact, been a favourite steed of his master's, the choleric Van Ripper, who was a furious rider, and had infused, very probably, some of his spirit into the animal; for, old and broken down, as he looked, there was more of the fraking devil in him than in any young filly in the country.

Ichabod was a suitable figure for such a steed. He rode with short stirrups which brought his knees nearly up to the pommel of the saddle; his sharp elbows stuck out like grasshoppers; he carried his whip perpendicularly in his hand, like a sceptre, and, as his horse jugged on, the motion of his arms was not unlike the flapping of a pair of wings. A small wool hat rested on the top of his nose, for so his scanty strip of a forehead might be called; and the skirts of his black coat flurled out almost to the horse's tail. Such was the appearance of Ichabod and his steed, as he shambled out of the gate of Hans Van Ripper, and it was altogether such an appearance as is rarely to be met with in broad daylight.

It was, as I have said, a fine autumnal day, the sky was clear and serene, and nature wore that rich and golden livery, which we always associate with the idea of abundance. The forest had put on their sober brown and yellow, while some trees of the tenderer kind had been tipped by the frosts into brilliant dyes of orange, purple, and scarlet. Streaming files of wild ducks began to make their appearance high in the air; the bark of the squirrel was heard from the groves of beech and hickory nuts, and the pensive whistle of the quail at intervals from the neighboring stubble field.

The small birds were taking their farewell baquets. In the fulness of their revelry they fluttered, chirping and frolic-ing from bush to bush and tree to tree, capricious from the abundance around them. There was the honest cock-robin, the favourite game of strippling sportsmen, with its loud, querulous note; and twittering blackbirds flying in sable clouds; and the golden-winged woodpecker, with his crimson crest, his broad black gorget, and splendid plumage; and the cedar bird, with its red-tipped wings and yellow-tipped tail, and its little montero cap of feathers; and the blue jay, that noisy cumbomb, in his gay light-blue coat and white under clothes, screaming and chattering, nodding and bobbing, and bowing, and pretending to be on good terms with every songster of the grove.

As Ichabod jugged slowly on his way, his eye, ever open to every symptom of culinary abundance, ranged with delight over the treasures of jolly autumn. On all sides he beheld vast store of apples, some hanging in oppressive opulence on the trees; some gathered into baskets and barrels for the market; others heaped up in rich piles for the cider-press. Farther on he beheld great fields of Indian corn, with its golden ears peeping from their leafy coverts, and holding out the promise of cakes and hasty puddings; and the yellow pumpkins lying beneath them, turning up their fair round bellies to the sun, and giving ample prospects for the most luxurious pies; and anon he passed the fragrant buckwheat fields, breathing the odour of the beehive, and, as he beheld them, soft anticipations stole over his mind of dainty slapjacks, well buttered and garnished with honey or treacle, by the delicate little dimpled hand of Katrina Van Tassel.

Thus feeding his mind with many sweet thoughts and "sugared suppositions," he journeyed along the sides of a range of hills which look out upon some of the goodliest scenes of the mighty Hudson. The sun gradually wheeling his broad disk down into west; the mid-bosom of the Tappan Zee lay motionless and glassy, excepting that here and there a general undulation waved and prolonged the blue shadow of the distant mountain. A fawmber cloud floated in the sky, without a breath of air to move them. The horizon was of a fine golden tint, changing gradually into a pure purple green, and from that in the deep blue of the mid-heaven. A slanting ray lingered on the woody crest of the precipices, that overhung some parts of the river, giving greater depth to the dark gray and purple of their rocky sides. A sloop was loitering in the distance, dropping slowly down with the tide, her sail hanging uselessly against the mast; and, as the reflection of the sky gleaming along the still water, it seemed as if the vessel was suspended in the air.

It was towards evening that Ichabod arrived at the castle of Heer Van Tassel, which he found throged with the pride & flower of the adjacent country. Old farmers, a spare featured-faced race, in homespun coats and breeches, blue stockings, huge shoes and magnificent powder buckles. There brisk and withered little dames, in close-crimped caps, long waisted gowns, homespun petticoats, with scissors and pin-cushions, and gay calico pockets hanging on the outside. Buxom lasses, almost as antiquated as their mothers, excepting where a snow hair, a fine blind or perhaps a white frock, gave symptoms of city innovations. The sons in short square skined coats, with rows of stupendous brass buttons, and their hair generally quond in the fashion of times, especially if they could procure an eel-kin for the purpose, it being esteemed throughout the country as a potent nourisher and strengthener of the hair. Brom Bones however, was the hero of the scene, having come to the gathering on his favorite steed Daredevil, a creature, like himself, full of mettle and mischief, & which no one but himself could manage. — He was in fact noted for preferring vicious animals, given to all kinds of tricks, which kept the rider in a constant risk of his neck for he held a tractable, wellbroken horse as unworthy a lid of spirit.

Pain would I pause to dwell upon the world of charms that burst upon the enraptured gaze of my hero as he entered a state parlour of Van Tassel's mansion: not those of the bevy of buxom lasses, with their luxuriant display of red and white; but the ample charms of a genuine Dutch country tea-table in the sumptuous time of autumn. Such heaped up platters of cakes of various and almost indescribable kinds known only to the experienced Dutch house-wives! There was the doughy doughnut the tender oily bunn, and the crisp and crumbling cruller, sweet cakes and short cakes, ginger cakes, and honey cakes, and the whole family of cakes. And then there were apple pies, and peach pies, and pumpkin pies; besides slices of ham and smoked beef; and moreover, delectable dishes of preserved plums, and peaches and pears, and quinces; not to mention broiled shad & roasted chickens together, with bowls of milk & cream, all mingled biggledy-piggledy, pretty much as I have enumerated them, with the motherly tea-pot sending up its clouds of vapour from the midst, Heaven bless the mark! I want breath and time to discuss this banquet as it deserves, and am too eager to get on with my story. Happily Ichabod Crane was not in so great a hurry as his his historian, but did ample justice to every dainty. — IRVING.

TO GOLD MINERS.

THE Subscriber having obtained a Patent in the year 1827, for Mills for grinding and washing Ore of Gold and other metals, and his plan having been generally adopted, deems it necessary to caution the public against using similar Mills without his consent. The subscriber thinks it unnecessary to give any description of his Mills, as they are in operation in various parts of the State. His Patents embrace Branch and Ridge Gold. Liberal terms will be conceded to all who make early application for Rights, and every information given on application.

STOP THE RUNAWAY.

IN December last, I purchased in Raleigh, of Mr. John Morrison and Mrs. Pearson, of Moore county, a negro man by the name of SAUEL. On the 8th of March, said negro ran away from my plantation, near Brown's Store, in Caswell county. Saueal is 22 years of age, about 5 feet 10 inches high, very dark complexion, of thin visage, high cheek bones, and answers very slowly when spoken to. I understand he was raised in Moore county, by a Mr. Lewis and was sold to Mr. Pearson, who since died at Moore Court House. He has been seen since he left me, at the house of his wife, who is the property of Mrs. Pearson, the lady of whom mention is above made. He is no doubt still lurking about there.

I will give $20 reward to any person who will deliver Saueal to me, at my residence in Rockingham county; or I will give $15 for his apprehension and confinement in any Jail, so that I get him again. WILLIAM BETHELLE, Rockingham county, June 6. 84 Sw.
