A writer in the Literary Gazette in noticing "Mrs. PIL's Illustrations of Lying," has the following re-

"There is one class of lies, which we are little surprised did not attract a larger share of Mrs. Opie's attention; lies told by Parents to their children. We believe that the slight regard in which strict truth is held among mankind, is principally owing to the lies which are told to children by their Parents during the few first years of their lives. Then is the time that permanent impressions may be as well made, as at any later period. It is then, probably, that what is called the natural propensity of a child is unfolded .-Many persons who have a great abhorrence of lying, and whip their children if they detect themin it, yet make no scruple of telling and acting to them the most atrocious falsehoods. There are few Parents who do not do this, in a greater or less degree, though doubtless without dreaming they are guilty of criminal deception. With many, the whole business of managing their children is a piece of mere artifice and trick. They are cheated in their amusements, cheated in their food, and cheated in their dress. Lies are told them, to get them to do any thing which is disagreeable. If a child is to take thing good for him to drink ; if recusant, she savs she will send for the doctor to cut off ceive once and answer the present purpose, but will invariably fail afterwards. Parents are too apt to endeavor to pacify their children by making promises they never intend to perform. If they wish, for instance, to ake away some eatable which they fear will be injurious, they reconcile them by the promise of a ride, or walk, or something else which will please them, but without any inbreaking their promises to children, if the performance be not perfectly convenient.-But they are the last persons to whom promises should be broken; because they cannot comprehend the reason, if there be one, why they are not kept. Such promises should be scrupulously redeemed, though at a geat inconvenience, even when inad vertently made.

nience can be to a parent. "We have only noticed a few of the cases of lying to children, but enough to illustrate the frequency of it. And yet, after having pursued such a course of deception for the two or three first years of life, if the Parent then finds his child trying to deceive him, and will tell a downright lie, he wonders how he should have learned to do so, for he has always taught him to speak the truth; without reflecting that he has been lying to him from his very birth. So he attributes that habit to an innate disposition and tendency for falsehood, which he has himself been fostering and nourishing from the first. Children soon learn to know when they are deceived, and learn to deceive others. They are not deceived many times in the same way; and the most comfortable method in the end, as well as the most comformable to the precepts of morality and religion, is, never to deviate in the slightest degree from the strict truth in our intercourse with them."

For the child's moral habit is of infinitely

comes to a close with the following remarks: Though I would not be thought by it, as if I were denying the reality of pleasures, or disputing the being of them, any more than one would the reality of pain-yet I must observe on this head, that there is a plain distinction made between pleasure and happiness. For though there can be no happiness without pleasure-yet the converse of the proposition will not hold true. SUICIDE PREVENTED. An interesting Narrative. Translated from the Italian for the Salem Observer. Mr. ---- meeting unexpectedly one day his dear and intimate friend, with a distressed countenance, inquired of him, with much solicitude, what could have occasioned it?-The friend, at first refused to answer him. but at length, after much importunity, he minate his days. His friend, struck with surprize, after a short pause, reflecting upon the primary good dispositions of human nature, and upon some other particular circumstances, demanded of him, the directions for his funeral, requesting also, that he would tell him how much money he had in his purse. He replied, that he was now richer both in gold and silver than he had ever been before. His philosophical friend then said, that such a sum of money would soon be useless to him, that he knew some deserving persons to whom it would be a great relief, beseeching him, that he would, as the last favor, immediately go with him and present to them the money with his own hands before he died. After much intreaty he consented; and they entered a chamber every part of which indicated misery and affliction. They beheld a man surrounded by a numerous family, all occupied in various industry in vain exerted itself to repel their extreme misery. The money was distributed among them. Oh! who can give any adequate idea of the humble gratitude of these miserable people, who on their knees embraced the garment and hand of their benefactor; or, who can express the tender and unusual pleasure that penetrates his heart! Behold them in one group! Instead of speaking they weep together. Embracing his friend, he, who a short time before had determined to destroy himself, cries, I will live, and every day by relieving the distressed, I will taste

Worthily to love, and fondly to devote ourselves to the happiness of another, who deserves our high regard, is not condemned his ears, or pull his teeth, or that she will go by religion. And the heart that is deceived or betrayed, need not augment its anguish by self-reproach. Love is not only an innocent but a noble passion. When guided and controlled by religion, it is the germ of all social virtues - the cement and the solace of the various relations of human life. When rewarded with the hallowed possession of its object, it strews the path of duty with flowers, and scents the air tention of gratifying them. This is lying, with fragrance; when unfortunate, and ill-redownright lying. People think nothing of quited, it becomes, absorbed in high and holy principles; investigating resignation with unwonted sublimity, and extracting from earthly disappointment, the calm satisfaction of heavenly hope. The process by which it is thus transformed, may impair the fragile tenement in which it is enshrined and the dross of mortality, in such a furnace, may melt away into its kindred earth; but the soaring, unrobed spirit, returns to God who gave it, and at last enjoys repose where it first derived existence.

DRESS THE MIND.

On the Sunday morning, before going to church, what a dressing there is among al classes, and what a stir to appear gay and pleasing! It is quite sufficient for the great | Why had he not the heart of Figaro?" purposes of our existence to wash the outside of the platter? Curls may be arranged, fine tortoise shell combs fixed, sparkling earrings hung, splendid garments displayed, and yet perhaps the gay fair one's mind may be poisoned with conceit, troubled with rivalry, and kept on the torture by ignorance and vanity. Windsor soap does not wash out the stains of the heart : Cologne water cannot throw a fragrance over an impure mind; nor will all the rubies of Golconda duzzle the recording angel into a forgetfulness of filling up the leaves of the book of Reflections on the state of Marriage by a married man .- The leading features in the character of a good woman, are mildness, complaisance, and equanimity of temper.-The man, if he be a worthy and provident husband, is immersed in a thousand cares. His mind is agitated, his memory loaded, and his body fatigned. He retires from the bustle of the world, chagrined, perhaps, by disappointments, angry at indolent or perfidious people, and terrified lest his unavoidable connexions with such people should make him perfidious himself. Is this the time for the wife of his bosom. his dearest and most intimate friend, to add to his vexaare so made, that from common gratifications tions, to increase the fever of an overburthenof our appetites, and the impressions of a ed mind, by a contentious tongne, or a disthousand objects, we snatch the one, like a contented brow? Business, in its most transient gleam, without being suffered to prosperous state, is full of anxiety, and turtaste the other, and enjoy that perpetual sun- moil. O, how dear to the memory of a man shine and fair weather which constantly at is the wife who uses gentle expressions, and tend it. This, I contend, is only to be found who makes her lap soft to receive and hush rive; he will be embosomed in the carresses in religion—in the consciousness of virtue— his cares to rest. There is not in nature so fascinating an object as a faithful, tender and affectionate wife.

THE FAITHFUL DOG.

During the sanguinary period of the Revolution in France, there was among the prisoners confined at Lyons, one named Jean Bousquie, whose trade was to prepare archil for dying. He was about 34 years of age, and the father of four children. A little copper ball like a bullet had been found in his said, that he was completely weary of his his children, and had been put there in play. It was considered that he fought against the waistroat pocket which belonged to one of troops of the Republic with a new and dangerous kind of arms, and he was arrested and sent to prison. He was always composed and serene, though convinced from the nature of the charge against him, that his fate was inevitable. A dog which he called Figuro, was the companion of his captivity. Never 5 did the animal quit him for a moment; he was always asleep when he slept; he was always by his side when he was awake, with a sail and pensive air, as if sympathising with his master's sorrows. Bousquie would often hold a long conversation with him. "Poor Figaro," would he say, "thou wert born, like me, under the pure sky of Languedoc; thou hast shared my wanderings and my dangers. At the fair of Beaucaire thou didst guard me from robbers and assassins. During the siege (of Lyons) thou wert always with me at the redoubt; like me thou didst sleep upon the ground; like me. labours; but it was too apparent, that their thou hadst but a slender portion to eat; and now thou hast followed me to prison. Poor Figaro! thou regardest me with heats-Entrance $15. an eye of sorrow; thou sighest even deeper than I do. Here, my friend, let us share our morsel together."

The neighbours of Bousquie were interested by this colloquy. The unfortunate merchant was soon interrogated, condemned and ed him. For eigh days the poor dog came to the Great Hall, and reated himself constantly on the spot where he had been accustomed to see his master, howling and making the bitterest moanings and lamentations. In vain did one of the prisoners who strove to drown the recollection of his ill fortune, by indulging in good cheer, endeavour to engage the affections of Figaro, and replace to him his last master by offering him the daintiest morsels when eating. The faithful dog looked with a languishing eye upon him but would not touch any thing; the most poignant grief out of Volney's dam. semed to have taken entire possession of him. HAIR TONIC.—We call the attention of those a flicted with premature baldness, to the excellent "Hair Tonic" prepared by Dr. Jayne of this City. Having used it ourselves, we can speak of its virtues by ex-perience, and we unhesitatingly pronounce it an in-valuable remedy to prevent the falling off of the bair, and to restore it from a dead to a fine, healthy appearance. We can also speak from personal knowledge of the cases of two or three friends who were predisposed to baldness, who by the use of Jayne's Hair Tonic, have now inxuriant hair. We have no disposition to puff indiscriminately, all kinds of remedies, for all diseases which Lesh is heir to, but when we have tested the virtue of an article, we are free to say it is good.-Saturday Evening Post, Sep.7, 1839

JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC .- The efficacy of this elegant preparation in restoring the growth of the hair in bald places, is truly wonderful. Where the hair has been worn off from the top of the head, by the careless practice of carrying things in the crown of the hat, it is generally considered difficult if not impossible to restore it, but it is found by numerous examples that the Hair Tonic reaches these cases very promptly and effects a complete cure. Every gentle man—(we say nothing to the ladies, it being a fair presumption that their hair is always in full luxuriance, at least it always seems so.) - every gentleman who finds his hair growing too thin, or becoming loose should place a bottle of Jayne's Hair Tonic in his dressing case and apply it with a free use of the hair brush every morning. The result will be a full, strong and healthy head of hair. The cases that have fallen under our own observation warrant us fully in asserting this.—Weekly Messenger:

Attention is called to Dr. Jayne's Hair Tonie, or the preservation, growth, and restoration of the Hair. We are assured that several most remarkable cures have lately been effected by this remedy. It is ertainly worthy a trial .- Philadelphia Saturday

JATNE's HAIR TOXIC .- We have, heretofore num ered ourselves among those who believed that the 'Hair Tonic," prepared by Dr. Jayne, was one of the many quack nostrams whose virtues are never seen beyond the fulsome pulls of their authors. We are willing, at length, to make public acknowledgement tion of those who may favor them with their custom. two or three months since, all the top of whose cranium was as bald as a piece of polished marble, maugro all our jesting and ridicule of the idea of attempting to cultivate so barren a spot, purchased a bottle or two of the Hair Tonie from Dr Jayne, and according to his directions applied it. During the present week, the same friend ushered himself into our present; and uncovering his hitherto naked head, astonished as with a thin, though luxurient growth of bair, from one to two inches in length-upon the very premises we had believed as unyielding to cultivation as the rackless sand that skirts the Atlantic. This is no puff, but is righteously true, and those who doubt the gentleman can be pointed out. What is more in favor of this "Tonic." the case here cited was not one of temporary baldness-no sudden loss of the hair-but was one of years' standing, though the gentleman is but faty-five years of age. — Philadelphia Spirit of the Times, October 21, 1839. thers of Dr. Jayne's preparations, are for sale in Raleigh, by Williams & Haywood, Petersburg, Dupuy. Ross er & Jones.
