BELIGION DEMANDS EFFORT.

A great obstacle to the influence of the gosel lies in the sloth and indolence of men. Christianity not only directs our ordinary conduct, but also enjoins duties and services which ordinary life does not demand. It is remarkable that in the scriptures, all the an intellectual toy, brightening the family epresentations of a religious life imply acive and laborious exertion. It is a race to the extreme joy which that presence and for sale upon the same terms, four Negro Slaves, to- tri-weekly four horse post coach line via Lincolnton be run, a contest to be fought; the kingdom those endearments are calculated to impart, of heaven is to be entered by violence; to ass the strait gate we must strive with arnestness and zeal. Against this, the indoence and apathy of mankind oppose themelves. It is first necessary to study our gants, and our dulies; for the mind does not eadily perceive its imperfections, and the nowledge of our duty depends on the relaon of principles to our circumstances. And then our duty is known, we delay to act but woman never; their constituents of mind upon it, and often wear out the sense of it are different,-the principles of thought and brough procrastination and thoughtlessness, action are moulded variously, and where the engagements and accidents. The one is raised and exalted by mingre, fixed resolution and constant exertion hat our duty may be known, and the knowedge applied to practice. The influence, too, of religion is not diected to separate, solitary, individual actions: operates to establish dispositions and prinples, which are to be the habitual motives endowed with purer and better feelings,and rules of life. But there is labor and dif- stronger and more exalted affection, to play a feulty in the formation of habits of holiness. How much have we to contend with in the stablishment and operation of religious priniple. Within, are strong passions which must constantly be ruled, desires after the world to be subdued, corrupt affections to be purified, indifference and coldness to be uickened to interest and zeal, levity to be urned to serious thought, and propensities and sins dear as the right hand to be cut off. Without, earth presents all its allurements to retain our affections and retard us from heaven; the cares of the world claim all our thoughts-property is to be acquired, reputation to be raised or sustained, children to destroyer of innocence-the despoiler of all be matured and fitted for the world-which distract the mind and take up all our interest and concern. Pleasure too approaches with its temptations; the examples of others urges us onward; the scenes and objects of troy that unsophisticated purity of soul, or if sense attract all our desires, and the sublime and glorious objects of faith are distant and are all best ; and the most productive of hapstant watchfulness, exertion, and prayer;

It is an heroic devotion which a woman displays in her adherence to the fortunes of a hopeless husband; when we behold her in domestic scenes, a mere passive creature of enjoyment, circle with her endearments, and prized for we can scarcely credit that the fragile being who seems to hold existence by a thread, is capable of supporting the extreme of human suffering ; nay, when the heart of man sinks beneath the weight of agony, that she should retain her pristine powers of delight, and by her words of comfort and patience, lead the Woman was created by the Great Giver of all good, as the help mate of man; formed in a superior, though more delicate moulddistinct character in the great drama of the created world; in fact, to reward the toil and labors of man, God made her not man's slave, neither to buffet the billows of the troubled sea of life, nor the jarring elements of January, 1841. All persons are hereby warned of public duties; but to share his pleasures, to console his troubled thoughts, to join with him in his joy, and exalt him in his happi ness, by her participation, and to meliorate his griefs by kindness and endearments .--Connection with the world destroys those other traits of feeling.
