THE ORIO.

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS.
From the St. Louis Bulletin.

THE HAPPY MAN.—In walking down Second street on Friday afternoon, on my way to the arsenal, I found a crack in my boot; and, recollecting the old adage, that "a stitch in time saves nine," I popped into the first cobbler's shop I met to get it mended. Unlooked for pleasures are generally most related, and I had no expectation of meeting with a philosophical cobbler. Pulling off my boot, I looked at the man. What an expansive forehead! What an intelligent countenance! What an expressive eye! There is truth in physiognomy, exclaimed I to myself; that fellow's brains are not made of green peas!

As he was fixing the boot, I then thought of a man born with capacities for intellectual pleasure and improvement, lofty, lordly man!—wasting his whole existence peat up in a small room, knocking away with his hammer, and bending from morning till night over a lapstone and a piece of leather. I took another look of the man; and, while the glorious sun was rolling on his glorious course, and all nature smiling in her most gorgeous and superb scenery, wowing the gaze, and filling the gazer with sublime feeling, here, said I to myself, he sits perpetually straining his eyes to poke a hog's bristle through a little hole. What an employment for a man capable, if properly instructed, of measuring the distance from this to Mercury! It is impossible he can be happy; he is out of his sphere. Just as he had got the thread through the third hole I spoke to him frankly, and said: "Your room is very small; are you happy here?" He answered, with some energy, "Happy? yes; as happy as the day long, and would not exchange situations with General Harrison, though I am certain he will be our President. I don't interfere with politics, but I know all about it." "But are you happy in your employment, confined all day in this small room?" "Yes, certainly; the fact is, the half of the world don't know the way to be happy. I was for a while myself humbugged about happiness; but, sitting on my stool and reflecting seriously one day, I got the secret. I thought to be happy you must be rich and great, have an inconveniently large house, more furniture by far than necessary, a table groaning with everything; but I soon found out that was stuff. I am happier here, with my last and hammer, than thousands with their fine houses and splendid equipage; and have a great deal of enjoyment in looking out of my little cabin and laughing at the follies of the world. They don't see me, and it does them no harm; and, between you and me, the world are busy pursuing mere shadows. One wants to be rich, another, to get into office—never satisfied; but here am I, mending old shoes, contented with my lot and situation, and happier by far than a King. Indeed, I am thankful that Heaven in its wrath never made me a King, for it's a poor business."

By this time my boot was ready, and wishing to prolong the conversation with a man who displayed so much real practical philosophy, I said, "Have you no distressing cares to vex you, no anxieties, no sleepless nights, no bills to meet, no pangs for yesterday, no fears for to-morrow?" He stared at me a moment, and said "No, none. The only cares which I have are comfort; I have a wife, the best in the world, and two children, and that is enough of comfort for any one man to enjoy. As to bills, I have none to meet, and never buy on credit, and never buy what I do not really want. As for the fears of to-morrow, I have no fear, but trust in a kind and ever-watchful Providence, believing that sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, and resignation to Providence to be the truest philosophy." What a noble fellow, said I, to mend a crack in a boot!—Himself a piece of noble workmanship! I felt inwardly the truth of the saying, "contentment is a kingdom;" and after I left my philosophical cobbler, I thought much about him; and am satisfied that his philosophy was sound, and that mankind in general have yet to learn the secret to be happy.

THEORY OF THE WIND.
Wind has been explained in the following manner: Heated air has a tendency to rise, and cold air rushes in to supply its place.—Thus the heated air of the equatorial regions rises and gives place to a current sent from the polar regions, which is a process that serves to equalize the temperature of the world. But the polar countries lying near to the axis of the sphere, the air from those regions has not received so much motion as that about the equator, or greatest distance from the axis; wherefore, it arrives at the equator, where the motion of the earth is greater. If it had no motion before, an east wind would be the consequence, and the force of that wind would be, as the difference between the motion of the earth where the air came from, and that where it arrived; but then it has a motion to the south; for it is rushing into a vacuum left by the air which rises; so that the wind will not be from the east, but north-east; and the number of degrees north of the east from which it will blow, will depend upon the comparative force of the current of air from the north to the difference between the earth's motion at the equator and at the polar region, from whence the air comes. As there must be a corresponding efflux from the equator higher up, according to this theory, the wind should everywhere be north-east or south-west, but it blows in very different directions at different times and places; and this probably depends on the variations in temperature at different times and places.

THE BEAUTIFUL JULIA.

A FACT.—I knew the beautiful Julia I—, when in the bloom of her seventeenth summer. She was beautiful, amiable, accomplished. Her form was the very symbol of grace, and in her dark liquid eye, there was a heavenly charm that captivated the soul. The burning words that fell from her lips of love, contained in them the very poetry of sounds; and often have I hung over her at the piano, entranced by sounds, sweet as when the angels string their golden harps. Never had I heard a voice so soft, and so sweet, so melodious. It was like the faint notes of an Aeolian harp, breathing over the bosom of a moon-lit lake. But the beautiful, the fascinating Julia, was led away by the love of dress, which brought on a pulmonary disease. I saw her when the rose had faded on her cheek, and the brilliancy of her eyes had departed. Though changed, she was still beautiful! I bowed down at her feet and spoke of returning health and of the roses that should again bloom on her cheek; but she laid her fair hand upon her heart, and shook her head. I can still see the expression of her countenance! Every day brought intelligence that the lovely flower—that she whom every one loved, was fading. At length she grew better. I was rejoiced!—A few days after, in the happy belief that she was recovering, I was playing on the violin. I heard a gentle step at my door—it was my mother. She entered and sorrowfully said, "The poor Julia is gone—she is dead!" The sound came like a thunder bolt to my heart; the musical instrument fell from my hand, and I burst into tears, repeating my mother's words—poor Julia is gone—she is dead!

I stood by the vault, and saw the once beautiful Julia entombed. It was a mournful moment, for all who knew her, loved her. Time rolled on. The seasons changed—spring came with her beautiful flowers, but the lovely Julia, the sweetest flower of them all, was seen no more.

Eight years passed away on the wings of time. Again I stood by that vault which was opened to receive another. I was seized with an irresistible desire to see once more the beautiful being. I unscrewed once more the lid of the coffin—there she lay—the shroud was gone, and the face was full, though of a dark hue. I could almost recognize the lineament of former loveliness. I was musing upon the mutability of happiness, when a blast of air swept the ashes from the face and left nothing but a ghastly skull before me.—God of mercy! I involuntarily exclaimed, is this the once beautiful Julia! A voice from the silent city of the dead seemed to answer—"This is the end of beauty—this is the conclusion of human hopes and human grandeur!"—unclasped the hands which were crossed upon the once fair and beautiful bosom; and as I held the cold relic in my own hand, I asked myself if this could be the once white hand which danced so delightfully over the keys of the piano, and woke the entrancing sounds of music. I turned away from the remains of the lovely one and wept, till the sound of approaching mourners aroused me.

AN AFFECTING INCIDENT.

We saw a letter, written a few days since, by a young lady, who, not many weeks ago, was journeying from this place to the west. It narrates a very exciting occurrence which took place on board the steamboat in which she was a passenger, and of which she was an eye witness. In passing down the Mississippi river, our narrator was summoned from the cabin by alarming shrieks and great commotion on deck. On going up, she found that a young lady had fallen overboard, and the boat in its progress was fast leaving her behind. A gentleman on board immediately divested himself of a part of his clothing and sprang into the river. He reached the drowning person, and upheld her in the water until a sail boat came to the rescue of both. The young lady, thus snatched from a sudden death, was the daughter of an elderly gentleman who was on board the boat—foreigners—neither of whom could speak English. On reaching the deck, and recovering from her fright, she passionately embraced her noble deliverer and bestowed kiss after kiss upon him, as the only way she could express her gratitude and thankfulness; while the father rushing from the cabin eagerly proffered him a roll of bank bills. These being refused, he ran to his cabin and returned with a bag of Gold, which he likewise pressed upon his acceptance; nor could either father or daughter be made to understand or feel satisfied, why the proffered reward would not be accepted.—Salem Obs.

KIRKHAM'S Patent Chime Killer.
The Subscriber also offers for sale at his Factory, a few of those very valuable Steamers, known to be the surest remedy for clearing Bedsteads of these tormenting Bugs. The Chime Steamer is made only by himself, and is warranted never to burst, and at all times to clear Bedsteads perfectly, without the least damage to the finest carved work.
Having had in use the above Machine, for many years, I have no hesitation in saying, that it is the best means that has ever been formed for destroying Chimes, and would recommend every person to use it.
B. P. HALSEY.
This will certify, having frequently used Mr. J. H. Kirkham's Chime Steamer, I cheerfully recommend to the public as a simple and easy way to destroy them, and without any damage to the Furniture.

RANAWAY from the Subscriber, on the 3rd of October, his negro man CHARLES. He is about 37 years of age; about 5 feet 6 inches high; raw boned, and very stocky built; yellow complexion; his hair very straight, and turning grey; has lost few teeth; his right hand and two of three of his fingers are so badly cut that he can't use them; back badly scarred; his eye looks as if he had been very high down; face faded; lock bow-legged; his hands open, and has a very broad flat foot.
It is supposed that he will attempt to make his escape down the Country. He was once taken up in Northampton County, Virginia. If apprehended, he will probably change his name. The last time he ran off he went by the name of West Brooks. Perhaps he will say his name is Lucas.
A reward of Twenty-five Dollars will be given for his apprehension.
