MAN'S MIXED MORAL WATURE.

The scriptures teach us that we are sinners, and the experience of every one confirms this truth. We are conscious that we have appetites and passions, which are even ready to plunge us into guilt. We feel that the flesh continually wars against the spirit. and that when we know the will of . God, there are dispositions within us which war against it and render us disobedient. This state, mournful as it is, we must acknowledge to be true; for we see and feel it. But this is not the whole of our nature. When we look no farther than this, we forget the principles which constitute its pride and glory. We have passions and appetites tending to sin. But have we not too an understanding and conscience given expressy to direct, restrain, and subdue them ?---We have dispositions which would, if ungoverned, betray us into guilt; but with them God has given us also feeling and principles which resist these evil propensities, and which when enlightened, if we fol low their dictates, would render us virtuous designed to be altogether inferior and subordinate to those which would guide us to goodness. Our very trial and probation, for which we were placed in this world, consists, in a great degree, in this struggle between the good and evil tendency within us, and the reduction of our bad passions and and reason. It is, I believe, taking partial affliction of the hypochondriac. and limited views of human nature, from confining attention to only the animal and sensual propensities, and from overlooking the checks which God has appointed against them, that so many amiable and excellent

An earthly fire at once flashed from Mrs. Woodsum's eyes she leaped from the bed like a cat, walked across the room, and seated herself in a chair.

"What !' she exclaimed in a trembling voice, almost choaked with agitation, 'what! marry that sleepy slut of a Hannah Lovejoy! that is too much for flesh and blood to bear!
