THE OLLO.

ON THE USE OF REPUTATION.

Fr. Accoltus d' Arreggo, a celebrated lawver in the 15th century, with the assistance of his servant, purloined several pieces of meat from a neighboring butcher's shop.— Two of his scholars, of doubtless character, were put in prison as authors of the theft .-Accoltus in vain accused himself, it was thought he did so to rescue the young men. When the affair was blown over, and the students set at liberty by paying a certain sum.

Accoltus brought plain proofs that he had committed the theft. On being asked why he had committed an action so unlike himself and of which no one would have suspected him, he replied that he did it to set in a strong light the advantages of a well established character.
