THE REBEL CLOCK.

I have caught, Mr. Editor, from the lips of a few lingering representatives of olden time, an anecdote of our revolutionary periud, with which you are probably familiar, but which has never yet enjoyed the honor of printed dignity. Incidents of this sort, I am aware, have no great interest in themselves, yet they are worth treasuring up, since they conduce, in some measure to clear away the gloom which rests like a cloud upon our early history, and indicate the character of the times, when they occurred, the peculiarities of men and the feelings and spirit of parties. I trust that you will deem it his little favorite lay on a bed of sickness. worthy of insertion in the columns of the quarrel, between the parent country and the and fro. colonies, was embittered by the memory of niuries inflicted, on both sides, during a projesty's Army that the opposition of the Ame- | do. rican people to unjust rule was no idle clam-but a strong, deep tide of indignation which could not be controlled, a determined resisance which could not be crushed. In our State the military spirit of the people had been sostered by the difficulties of 71, out of which grew the war of the Regulators, and the pending struggle. The prominent men of the Cape Fear had been early in the field to do battle in the cause of civil and religious liberty, they had fearlessly encountered every danger, had never murmured at privations however severe, and had made sacrifices such as those upon which the "the Gods themselves throw incense." These were the people, so little inclined to submit to the indignities of an insolent foe, over whom Maj. Chriag, at the time of our story, exerted a hateful authority supported by his scores of bayonets. This officer was one whose moral nature was rather that of a brute than a man. Peevish and irritable, rude and vindictive, he took peculiar delight in inflicting blows, like the Persian prince, on the stream which mocked his efforts to make it subservient to his will His subordinates, it may well be inferred. reflected, in no slight degree, the characteristic of their commander. On some day during this armed occupation of the town. perchance, to make it more disagreeable and galling to the citizens, the anniversary of some bloody triumph obtained over their countrymen, the officers of this command assembled in the house* of Mr. Toomer, which formerly stood near the corner of Market and Second Streets, to indulge in festive, enjoyment. Amongst the many articles of furniture in his mansion was an old-fashioned clock, that occupied in upright grandeur, a corner of the large chamber in which the banquet was held: Mr. Toomer, the ancester of one who now holds a conspicuous place in the esteem and love of his fellow citizens, was a sterling Whig, and we may reasonably deduce the fact, that all things connected with him assumed the hue of their lord's prejudices. Whether the old clock partook of his peculiarities, his friendships and his enmities, we cannot pretend to say; but for many years it had refused to perform duty as a time-piece, and there it still stood in sullen silence, as if indignant at the unseemly desecration of an American's home; while its pondrous arms maintained a fixed immobility. As the revel proceeded and the night grew old, we may presume, that loud were the denunciations and bitter the jests aimed at the insurgent population of our country.-Perchance some brutal fellow, as the gob let fell from the trembling hands of incipient inebriation, pronounced some horrid curse upon our gallant fathers, where there was none, as he thought, to speak in their behalf, or resent the insult. Now though most probable, we cannot vouch for the accuracy of this presum ption, but it is true and well authenticated, that during this feast, the noble old clock struck clearly and distinctly one for each of the thirteen members of the confederacy. The party was astounded and amazed at what seemed the effect of her. supernatural agency. They arose to a man from their seats, and as the many strong portions, they had imbibed, began to assert their power, alarm and apprehension gave place to excitement and anger. They, probably, fancied the starch and prim looking old clock, to be some sturdy rebel that mocked their festivities and frowned on their drunken orgies. Well might the reeling wretches have thought so! The massive indices of the instrument were fit emblems of the stout arms of a republican. Whether others think so or not, we religiously believe, that at this very juncture and under these very circumstances the finger of this Old Whig Clock did point with scorn at the base defamers of the absent, these pot-valiant heroes. It is further stated, and on good authority, that a furious onset was made on the unoffending clock with drawn swords; and we learn from a friend at our elbow, a promising young member of the bar, that this very identical clock fell, afterwards, into the hands of his father and bore, beyond doubt, the very marks of the blows inflicted on this occasion; and further, this worthy and patriotic instrument after the declaration of peace did relax from its obstinate silence and performed, with satisfaction to the owner, its legitimate functions. #### AN AFFECTING PICTURE.

The following extract from one of the last numbers of Master Humphrey's Clock, is remarkable for its simplicity and its pathos. The sobbing child came close up, and took the little languid hand in her's. Releasing his again after a time the sick boy laid him gently down.

'You remember the garden, Harry, whispered the schoolmaster, anxious to rouse him, for a dullness seemed gathering upon the child, and how pleasant it used to be in the evening time. You must make haste to visit it again, for I think the very flowers have missed you, and are less gay than they used to to be. You will come soon my dear, very soon now, won't you.

The boy smiled faintly-so very faintlyand put his hands upon his friend's grey head. He moved his lips too but no voice came from them; no, not a sound, tant voices borne upon the evening air, came floating through the open window. 'What's that?' said the sick child, opening his his eyes.

'The boys at play upon the green.' He took a handkerchief from his pillow. and tried to wave it above his head. But the feeble arm dropped powerless down.

'Shall I do it?' said the schoolmaster. " Please wave it at the window,' was the fair reply, 'Tie it to the lattice. Some of them may see it there. Perhaps they'll think of me, and look this way.
