WALBRIDGE.

Some years ago I became acquainted with a person of the dame of Walbridge, whose appearance and deportment interested me in a singular degree. He seemed then about eight and thirty, slender, and genteelly formed; not handsome, but possessing in a remarkable degree that charm which makes a person interesting. Though he never complained, but, on the contrary, supported beyond any person lever knew, an equanimity of temper, yet to those who observed him with attention, it was evident that he laboured under the recollection of some bitter calamity. Every feature of his expressive face bore testimony that it had at no distint period been wrung with ang ish. He might be said to resemble some fertile region of Sicily a long while ago laid waste by an earthquake, and whose smiling aspect, though in some measure restored by time, still every where bears traces of the ravages it once sustained. His was a painful countenance, as was once observed, and the phrase expressed its char-

I thought to have gone to the grave in silence and carried with me every memorial of the calamities that have fallen on my head. That no one has ever yet heard me complain, is no proof that I have never suffered ; and if I do not sympathize with the common ills of life, it is because every body seems to me to be happier than I am. In the circle which Walbridge frequented, he excited much of that interest which we feel, we know not why for some persons, and was highly esteemed, though he took little pains to get the good will of any one. He evidently possessed acute feelings, but made little parade of them ; on the contrary when on any occasion they were assailed, he seemed to task his mind to subdue, or, at least, disguise them. Though in a few instances I remember to have seen him enter with spirit into the discussion of common topics, yet, in general, he seldom exerted his powers but on subjects of deeper and more permanent interest. Then his severe and manly style of speaking, his force of thought, his mingled feeling, and philosophic indifference, together with the strong and earnest expression of his face, gave an indes-

At the time of our first settlement this region was a perfect wilderness.
