fluence our modern writers of every description, we should not have so much false philosophy, so many almost libertine works of fancy pouring from the press.

It is well known that when Congreve drew near his last moments; in the bitterness of a conscious perversion of his genius, he groaned aloud, and declared that it was the memory of the light scenes in his plays, which sat so heavy on his parting soul. He would give worlds, he said, to commit every line of those applauded dramas to the flames. It would be well if every writer, whether his work be long or short, grave or gay, would reflect when he is writing it, on what it may possibly appear to him in the last hours of his life, in the retrospection of a death bed.

Lord Herbert was one of the most accomplished men of his time. He possessed a fine person, a heart formed to derive pleasure from love, and all the elegance of rank, youth and fame. He was surrounded by flattering friends in the shape of Soldiers, Statesmen, and Princes. He was adulated by women of all degrees, and even Queens were jealous of his smiles. So idolized, this young and amiable nobleman is seen sacrificing all their incense on the altar of his Creator; he kneels devoutly before it and casting the first fruits of his genius to the earth, dictates it all to Him, or begs that it may perish ! This humility and piety is as exemplary as it is admirable.
