A young man passing with his regiment was obliged to remain at a Hotel. He his malady occasioned him : his hostess, untouched by his destitute situation, had him carried into a granary, where all the furniwater; refusing to call in the aid of a physician to avoid the responsibility which she apprehended such an additional charge might involve her. It happened that the first floor Genevese, Madame and Mademoiselle Agiee, who had visited Lyons for the benefit of change of air; they were both advanced in habit, they did injustice to their real merit y a pretension to something beyond it, and pedantry completely national. The fate of he young soldier interested all the domestics of the hotel, and the particulars of his friendless condition reached the ear of Mademoiselle Agiee through her maid, who acquainted her at the same time with the cruelty of the landlady, who threatened to send im to the hospital. The maid succeeded in wakening the sympathy of her mistress, who immediately sent for a physician, in forming the hostess that she would answer ll expenses, and that it was her pleasure the sick man should be removed without delay o a comfortable chamber. The humane Abigail, meanwhile, never quitted the chamber of the invalid whom she had taken so happily under her protection. Weakened by his illness, which had been so aggravated by neglect, the young soldier was in a frightful state of delirium when the physician came and during the process of changing his apartwas greatly astonished to find himself in well furnished chamber, and believed himself dreaming. Near his bed was his faithful nurse, whom he began to question, but who contented herself with replying that a friend, who took an interest in him, had given orders that he should be properly attended .--Days, and even weeks escaped thus, till at length the young soldier, recovering his strength, insisted on being informed to whom e was indebted for so many benefits. There was in the expression of his countenance something that commanded respect, which even excited fear; the good woman named her mistress, and, with all possible delicacy, related to him the miserable circumstances in which she had found him. He entreated to see Mademoiselle Agiee, that he might lighten his heart of some of its gratitude; he was not yet able to rise, nor was he permitted to read; but he was, nevertheless, sufficiently re-instated to feel the weight and weariness of an idle life. Mademoiselle Agiee consented to the demand of the young soldier, and paid him her first visit; she remained with him only a few moments, but promised to return and bring him books, desiring him to make his choice, and offered to read for him till he should be no longer forbidden to with joy, and selected the Life of Turenne, and a book on geometry. It is from herself that I received the details I have given ;-it is easy to imagine with what animation she descanted on her hero; even without partaking her enthusiasm, it was impossible not to listen to her with interest; besides, noble and generous sentiments belong to our intellectual existence; no matter what country we belong to, or what our opinions, the emotions of the heart wait not to consult our prejudices .-
