begs the public to rely on what he says, and to be assured that they may certainly expect all that is promised. In the Counties of Granville Person, Caswell, Rockingham, Franklin and Nash, all of which are in the same vicinity, there is not a single press in operation ; and the citizens of these counties, most of them reading men, are compelled to subscribe for foreign papers, which contain none of the home news, most interesting to the subscribers, and to have their advertisements and job work executed at such a distance, as to be inconvenient in the extreme. The undersigned has therefore thought that a paper situated in Oxford, which is nearly in the centre of this vacancy, would afford great facilities and advantages to this community, aside from its merit of a political, miscellaneous, and literary character. In addition to this, the northern mail arrives here as soon, or sooner, than it does in Raleigh, and the raper could thus spread through the country, the latest news from Washington, and from the north, quicker than it could possibly be obtained from any other periodical, or publication in the State-so that if it were to be nothing bat a mere transcript of the latest intelligence, it would be almost as valuable to this community as the Washington Intelligencer or Globe, and would be besides, much cheaper. But the undersigned intends that it shall be inferior to none in the State, either in point of mechanical execution, or editorial ability. He has made arrangements for exchanging with all the most valuable publications in the United States; he has type and paper of superior quality, and printers of great skill and ability. The editorial department will be under the exclusive control of C. H. WILEY, Esq. a young gentleman whose name, to all who know him, will be a sufficient recommendation. His pen is already favorably known, and it only wants an opportunity to become the most popular in the State. He will spare no exertions to render the paper amusing and instructive; and with his varied acquirements as a scholar, writer, and a man of extensive reading, is able (and he is certainly willing) to afford his readers a weekly literary treat, with which they cannot be displeased.

Mr. WILEY is also a firm and consistent Whig, and although the Mercury will be by no means, what is

If all parties were as degraded as they represent each other to be, they would be fallen indeed, and all our boasted free institutions, nay all the restraints of law, national, civil and divine, would soon be prostrated in the whirlwind of contending passions, like rootless stubble before the sweeping blast. of their views; convinced, that truth is only to be arrived at, after a fair and impartial hearing of the merits of both sides of every controverted question. With this exposition of his views and designs, the undersigned now submits his Prospectus to a generous public, and respectfully solicits their patronage. The community whom he particularly desires to be benefited by this paper, and for whose support he confidently hopes, are evidently as intelligent, liberal, and patriotic, as any in this or any other State. He firmly believes that they only want an opportunity to afford a triumphant refutation of the illiberal aspersions which some would cast upon them, by coming forward and manfully sustaining all laudable enterprise, cherishing and rewarding merit among themelves. He is convinced that the fact of there being no paper published among them, does not prove either their inability, or unwillingness to support one; and only an evidence that no one has yet given them a fair trial. This the undersigned hopes to do, and he ardently trusts that his estimate of the patriotic zeal and public spirit of this community, will be found rather below than above the mark. He only wishes them to try him, and if he does not fulfil, to the letter, every promise made in this Prospectus, he will not object to their abandoning him at once.
