ROMAN WOMEN.

The following picture of Roman women during the days of the Republic, extracted from a work entitled, Travels of Polycletes, in letters from Rome, A. U. C. 668-672, abridged from the original work of respect; not have their lictors ever dared of the Baron de Theis, exhibits some amusing traits, to lay hands upon any female citizen. If she and may suggest some useful hints.

puts over her other garments a very wide which supplies the wants of men. robe, called palla or peplus, from its resemblance to a yeil.

But how could I ever venture to undertake description of the necklaces, ear-rings, patches, cosmetics, bracelets, rings and many other useless ornaments, the very names of which I am unable to recollect? How could ne correctly their curling-irons, pincers, mirrors of steel or polished brass, &c. The Romans have a very happy term in their language for the multiplicity of objects, mundus muliebris, a woman's world. On their side, the women return jest for jest, saying that a woman without pearls is like a consul without lictors; and when their husbands reproach them with their immoderate love of ornament, they reply, that it is an act of religion to sacrifice to the Graces.

The toilet of the female citizens of lower rank is more simple; it is composed of tunics common to both sexes, and a sort of toga longer than that of the men, which is confined beneath the bosom by a wide girdle.-It is close at the top, and envelopes the whole body; the right arm is at liberty, and the left, holding up the bottom of a robe, disposes it in a graceful waving fold called sinus. Women of all ranks, when in mourning, wear neither gold nor purple; they then cover themselves with a very full black robe. called vicinium; and on the day of the funeral, they wear several, one above another. which they throw successively on the faneral pile of their husbands or fathers. This custom is very ancient; it is mentioned in the law of the twelve tables, where the number of robes that may be burned on these occasions, is restricted to three. But, leaving descriptions merely calculated wife drinking out of the great vases in which wine is kept, killed her on the spot; and when brought to trial for the murder, he was acquitted by the laws of Romulus. It is not surprising that intoxication in a woman appeared a capital crime to the first Roman peared a capital crime to the first Roman legislator; but what would be have said had he seen our frantic Menades insult the gods.

SEELBY is the seat of Justice of the New County of Cleaveland, established at the last session of the Legislature. It is situated about midway between Rutherfordton and Lincolnton, and about 30 miles from Yorkville and Spartansburg C. H. S. Carolina, near the road crossing Broad River at Quinn's Ferry, upon a beautiful level Ridge, free from mud, and only one MILE and a HALF from WELSON'S st LPHUR SPRINGS.

The Subscribers are sure, that to those persons de sirous of procuring an agreeable and healthy residence no place could present greater advantages. The situation is high, dry, and healthy. It is well watered, near Broad River, and a thick settled neighborhood. There are a large number of Saw Mills near, and every other convenience for building, and Warson's Services only fifteen minutes ride distant. Nothing is necessary to be said of the character of these Springs. They are regarded as being inferior to none in Southern country, and hundreds of invalids can attest their healing properties. Within a hundred vards of the Wilson's White Sulphur Springs, there is a red Sulphur, and a Chalybeate Spring, and there are several other Sulphur Springs in the immediate neighborhood of Shelby, though none equal to Wilson's for medical properties. It is certain, too, that as soon as the Town gets under way, the line of Stages, tri-weekly and four horse coaches, from Raleigh to Asheville, and thence to Nashville, Tenn. and also from Spartansburg C. H. to Lincolnton, will pass through, if. fording every reasonable mail facility. In short, nothing is wanting to make it one of the most delightful spots on earth, except—a plentiful supply of good in-habitants, and we wish all such to come and buy. TERMS ONE and two years credit, with bond
