When James the II. abdicated the crown, Lord D-, who was strongly attached to that monarch, determined to share his fortunes, and became a voluntary exile from his native country, with an amiable wife and a ive daughters; for whom a taste for the reigning pleasures of the age, and a close attendance on the court, prevented his making the provision to which their life entitled them. of conjugal affection: she represented to him the necessity there was for inspecting his affairs, as his son was yet a minor, and the infirm state of her own health made it too probable they would very speedily need his assistance to guide them through a world beset with many dangers to inexperienced youth Nature had been liberal in her gifts to this der feelings. The just idea he had of what was due to a deserving wife, and such a numerous offspring, occasioned he determined to quit a cause in which he could no longer be useful, in order to retrieve his own affairs, which he was but too sensible were in a very unpromising state.-He quitted the unfortunate king with assurrances that his sword and fortune were at his devotion whenever his affairs required the assistance of either, and returned to his seat -, where his lady had informed him she was retired. To his great concern, he found her in a state that threatened but a short continuance in life. She was surroun-

served to amuse the hour of solitude. The sight of those so dear to him, for some time deprived Lord-of the power of utterance; and though his wife had reason to expect the long desired interview, when it arrived she was unable to support it, and fainted away before she could express the pleasure she felt at his return. The usual methods restored her to life; but it was not in the power of medicine, or the tenderness of a doating husband she adored, to repair a constitution broke with the long and unremitting solicitude she had felt during his absence. In short Lord - had the affliction to lose his wife about two months after his return. This misfortune sunk very deep, and he determined to alleviate it by a close inspection of his affairs, and a strict attention to forming the minds of his children .-An examination into the state of his fortune convinced him that it would be highly necessary to sequester himself from the world in about sixteen. After which, with many apologies for his boldness, he withdrew, with an air less rustical, than that with which he entered.

The scene afforded matter of conversation amongst the ladies. The youngest, who had been distinguished by the miller, received the ironical congratulations of her sisters with great good humour, and my Lord sometimes joined the mirth. About a month after the servant of the Earl of I .--- presented his Lord's complinents and intention of waiting on him that morning. As Lord Dhad held no intercourse with the nobleman, he was rather surprised at the message, but returned a polite answer; telling his daughters that as it would be near the dinner hour before the Earl would take his leave, if they could provide a genteel entertainment, he would press his stay. A proposal of this kind, from a person of he Earl's character, rank and fortune, could not fail to be highly pleasing to Lord D-, who replied, 'I am truly sensible of the honmany struggles in his breast, and at length or done me by this proposal, and flatter myself that your Lordship is not deceived in the opinion you form of my daughter; but it is necessary to inform you, that the injury my fortune suffered by so long absenting mysolf from my native country, makes it impossible for me to give them sums equal to their birth. To supply this deficiency, I have endeavored to qualify them for being useful members of Society, and to instil into their minds a relish for true domestic happiness, rather than a taste for the splendour of high life.' 'I applaud the method you have taken for the real happineas of your family (returned the Earl;) and since your Lordship has stated no objection to my proposal, must beg leave to be introduced to your daughter as a man who has the highest sense of her merit, and who wishes to contribute to her happiness by every means in her power.

Lord D-then conducted the Earl into the apartment where the ladies were; and introducing him to Sophia informed her of his generous intentions. This lovely girl, had, during dinner, surveyed him very attentively, thought his person graceful, and his manners engaging, but had'nt the leastsuspicion of the motives of his visit. She received his proposals with an air of modesty that charmed him, and it was with reluctance that he took leave of this amiable family.
