A TALE OF REAL LIFE.
BY MISS LESLIE.

"I am going round by Broad street to inquire of Ross, the glover, about little Lucy Wendall."
"Lucy Wendall! Who is she?"
"She is a pretty little Dutch girl, who lived opposite to me in that bit of a dwelling that looks like a crack or a seam between two houses on each side of it. She lived with her grand parents, natives of this city and once proprietor of many a lot within it; but they had been out-bargained and outwitted, till they were reduced to this little tenement, some twenty feet by fifteen. Their only surviving descendant was my little friend Lucy, a pretty fair skinned, fair haired, blue eyed girl, of a modest, quiet, engaging demeanor. For many months after we moved to street, I knew nothing of the family, but from such observation as my eye could take, neatness was the ruling passion of the household. Their only servant Minerva—the goddess of wisdom should have known better, used to scrub the house, weekly, from the garret to the cellar; their only carpet was shook every Saturday, the steps were scoured daily, and I never in my life saw the old woman without a dusting cloth in her hand. Such a war of extermination did she carry on against the intruding particles, that my friend E. used to say it must be hard for her to think of turning to dust."
"Lucy had no visitors, no companions; and the only indulgence of the old people, which was sitting on the stoop every pleasant afternoon, according to the ancient Dutch custom, she never partook. She never went out excepting on Sunday to church, and then she reminded me of one of those bright, pretty flowers that hang on the crabbéd bare stem of the cactus. I pitied her, her spring of life seemed passing away so drearily. My pity was misplaced; and I felt it to be so when I looked into her serene & sweet countenance, and saw there the impress of that happiness which certainly flows from duties religiously performed. It is a great matter, Grace, to have your desires bounded within your station; to be satisfied with the quiet, unnoticed performance of the duties Providence has allotted to you; and not to waste your efforts of strength in seeking to do good or obtain pleasures beyond your sphere.—This is true wisdom; and this was Lucy Wendall's. At last, there came to this obscure family what comes to all—death and its changes. The old man and his wife died within a few days of each other, of the influenza that then raged in the city. The hope of serving the pretty orphan induced me to go to the house. She received me gratefully, and as an old friend; for though we had never exchanged a word; there had been interchanges of kind looks and friendly nods—those little humanities that bind even strangers together. On inquiry into her affairs, I found that she was left almost penniless, but that a discreet and kind female friend had procured a place for her in Ross's glove factory. Lucy was skilled in all the art and craft of the needle. Ross, it seems, is a very thriving tradesman; and on the warm recommendation of Lucy's friend, he had promised to board her in his family, and allowed her sufficient compensation for her labor.

"In a few days she removed to her new home. It is now fifteen months since she left our street. She came once to tell me she was perfectly satisfied with her place, and since I have heard nothing of her. Do not look so reproving, my lady Mentor. I have been intending for some time to call at Ross's to make enquiries about her. My story has brought us almost to the shop—" "John Ross, Glove Manufacturer." This must be the place. Stop one moment, Grace, and look through the window; that man no doubt, is Ross himself. What a fine head! you might know such a man would succeed in the world, let his lot be cast where it would. He would have been a resolute general, a safe statesman; but here is an honest, thriving glover, and that perhaps is just as well; nothing truer than the true old couplet,
"Honor and shame from no condition rise,
Act well your part, there all the honor lies."
"The old man looks as if he might be a little tyrannical, though. Heaven grant that poor Lucy may not have suffered from that trait in his physiognomy."
"The only customer is coming out. Now we have a clear field, let us go in."
"Mr. Ross, I believe!"
"The same, ma'am."
"I called, Mr. Ross, to enquire after a young woman who came to live with you last Christmas."
"I have had a great many young women living with me ma'am.

"The old man's humor requires me to be explicit. Her name, Mr. Ross, was Lucy Wendall."
"Ay Lucy Wendall did come into the factory about that time."
"There was an expression in Ross's face at the mention of her name, that I did not clearly comprehend. It might betide good, and it might betide evil of Lucy. I merely wished to know, Mr. Ross, whether Lucy has given satisfaction, and whether she still remains with you?"
"Was you a friend to Lucy Wendall, ma'am?"
"I should think it an honor to call myself so, but I could hardly claim that name. She was my neighbor, and interested me by her correct deportment and uncommon dutifulness to her old parents." Ross made no reply, but fumbled over some gloves that were lying on the counter; then tied up the bundle, and laid it on the shelf. "You seem, Mr. Ross, not disposed to answer my enquiries, I am afraid some misfortune has happened to the poor girl."
"Would you like to know ma'am what has happened to her?" He leaned his elbow on his desk, and seemed about beginning a story.
"Certainly I would."
"Well, you know when Lucy Wendall came to me she was a little demure thing—not a beauty, but so comely and tidy, that she was a pretty resting place for the eye of old or young. She was great a contrast to the other girls in the work shop as white is to black. She just sat quiet in one corner, and minded her work and took no part in their gabbling. You must know what a parcel of girls, there is dinging from morning till night, like forty thousand chimney swallows. Lucy was very different; she made herself neat and trig in the morning, and did not lose half an hour at noon, when the 'prentice boys were coming to dinner, twirling out curls and perfuming her hair. The boys and girls used to have their jokes about her, and call her the little parson; but she only preached in her actions, and this is what I call practical preaching, ma'am. She was a little master-workman with her needle. I never had a match for her, since I first began business; but you know ma'am, there's always a but in this life—she gave me great offence. She crossed me where I could least bear to be crossed."
"Not intentionally, I am sure, Mr. Ross."

"You shall hear, ma'am. I have an only son, John Ross—a fine, fresh looking, good natured, industrious youth. I set my heart on his marrying my cousin, Amy Bruce; she is the daughter of my youngest sister, and had a pretty fortune in hand, enough to set John up in any business he fancied. There was no reason in the world why he should not like Amy. I had kept my wishes to myself, because I knew that young folk's love is like an unbroken colt, that will neither mind spur nor bit. I never mistrusted that any thing was going on wrong, till one day I heard the girls making a great wonderment about a canary bird that they found when they went in the morning into the workshop in a cage hanging over Lucy's seat; and then I remembered that John had asked me for five dollars the day before, and when I asked what he wanted the money for, he looked sheepish and made no answer. I thought it prudent before matters went farther, to tell John my wishes about his cousin Amy. My wishes ma'am, I have always made a law to my children—to be sure, I have taken care for the most part that they should be reasonable. I am little wifful I own it; but it's young folk's business to mind; and, "Children obey your parents," is the law both of scripture and nature. So I told John, I did not hint any suspicion about Lucy; but I told him this marriage with his cousin was what he could have no objection to; what I had long fixed my heart upon, and what he must set about without delay, on peril of my displeasure.—He was silent and looked cast down; but he saw I was determined, and I believed he would not disobey me. A few evenings after, I saw a light in the workshop after the usual time, and I went to enquire into it. I had on my slippers and my steps made little noise. The upper part of the door is set with glass. I saw Lucy was washing off a pair of gloves; my son was standing by her; it appeared that were for him, and he insisted on her washing them on his hand.—Here, poor thing, seemed to tremble; and the glove would not go on, but it came off, and their hands met without gloves, and a nice fit they were. I burst in upon them. I asked John if this was his obedience to me, and I told Lucy to quit my service immediately. Now the whole matter is past, I must do John the justice to say he stood by her like a man. He said this was a matter in which he could not obey me; he had given his heart and promised his hand to Lucy and she owned the loved him—him who was not worthy of her love; he said, too, something of my having hitherto been a kind father and a kind man; and he would not believe that the first of my doing a wrong would be to the orphan girl whom Providence had placed under our roof. Ma'am, you will wonder that I hardened my heart to this, but you know that anger is said to be short madness and so it is; and besides, there is nothing makes us so deaf to reason and true feeling as the stinging sense that you are wilfully doing wrong. I was harsh, John lost his temper; and poor Lucy cried, and was too frightened to speak; and it ended in my telling Lucy that she should not stay another day in my house; and John that if he did not obey me, my ears should be upon him.

"The next morning they had both cleared out, and every body thought they had gone off to be married; and so I believed till night when John came in like a distracted man, and said he had been all day seeking Lucy in vain; that the only friend she had in the city knew nothing of her; and when I answered 'So much the better,' he accused me of cruelty; and then followed high words, such as never should pass between father and son; and it ended in my turning him from my door. I do not wonder you turn away, but hear me out. Saturday night, three days after, John came home an altered man. He was as humble as if he only had been wrong; he begged my pardon, and promised to obey me in all things but marrying Amy Bruce. 'I give up Lucy, father,' he said, 'but I cannot marry any body else.' I forgave him—from the bottom of my heart I forgave him—and I longed to ask him to forgive me; but I had not come quite to that yet. I asked him what had brought him back to duty. He put into my hands a letter he had received from Lucy.—She had persevered in not seeing him—but such a letter, ladies! If ministers could but speak so to the heart, there would be no sin left in the world. She said they had deserved to suffer for carrying matters so far without my knowledge. She spoke of me as the kindest of masters; and then she spoke of the duty a child owed a parent; and she should never have any peace of mind till she heard we were reconciled; and told him it would be in vain for him to seek her, for she had solemnly resolved never to see him again.—The paper was blistered with tears from top to bottom; but, saving and excepting that ma'am, there was nothing from which you could guess what it cost her to write the letter.

"I could not stand it; my heart melted within me. I found her that very night, and without loss of time brought her back to my house; and then, he added, walking hastily to the farther extremity of the shop, and throwing open a door that led into a back parlor, 'there, ma'am, is the long and short of it.'
"And there was one of the most touching scenes of human life; my pretty, dutiful friend become a wife, a mother! her infant in her arms, her husband sitting beside her watching the first intimations of intelligence and love in its bright little face! Such should be the summer of happiness when the spring is consecrated to virtue.
