lover could do no less than fall down on his She knew his voice--gazed on him for a knees before her, and declare his passion in moment-then burst into a flood of tears .the most exalted strain of hyperbole. She "O Henry, Henry!" said she, "In what a determined at once to reject him, and to rally situation do you find me! I little thought him for professing an attachment she did not once, when surrounded with the vain and gay, believe him to feel. Assuming an arch look, I should ever come to this-can you forgive she repeated some lines of the well-known me? I have but a short time to live!"

" Distracted with care, For Philli's the fair," &cc.

Mortified at her refusal and still more at the disrespectful manner of the young lady, Henry begged her pardon, apologized for the acter and withdrew.

Scarcely had her excellent, but despised hearing that my husband was in New-York, suitor lest her, ere she was joined by one of a different character. This was William .-He came, and showed her tickets for a ball promised compliance, obtained the small sum that evening. So tempting an offer could not of which I was possessed, then left me again be refused; and without consulting her parents, she immediately consented to go. the gay whirl of the dance, conscious of her own beauty and superior grace, she forgot Henry.

William was nothing more than an adventurer of specious manners, and insinuating address; fond of company, and sufficiently fashionable and frivolous to please the volatile and unreflecting Harriet. His acquaintance with her had been of short 'duration, and he was under the impression that her parents were rich. Though incapable of feel ing the finer and softer emotions of love, he determined to turn to the best account his acquaintance with Harriet. With the pretence of taking her to a ball, he induced her to accompany him to the house of a minister, where they were united in the bonds of matrimony.

On their return home, Harriet, with a lively air, introduced William to her parents, saying, " Papa-my husband. Mammathis is my dear husband, Mr. J." The old couple looked aghast-looked again-blamed their precipitation, and then, (for what else could they do?) forgave them.

" But," cried the old man, " since you have married my daughter, Mr. J., I wish to know, (excuse me) sir, how you are to support her?"

that hallowed flame, that consumes all sordid considerations."

"Well, sir, all that may be very good but can you live on love ?" " By no means, sir."

"Then I am afraid your hallowed flame will soon be burnt out," said the old man .-" However, I will notchide you; but let me ask, how and where are you going to live?"

The young man cast his eyes on the floor. "I see, cried the old man, " you get married, to-reflect afterwards. So not to mar your present happiness by sordid considerations, we will talk about them when your consuming love begins to abate."

The little orphan now lives in Henry's family. She sometimes visits the grave of her mother, but she is too young to reflect on the miseries that may attend an unhappy match.

ANECDOTES OF DR. FRANKLIN

Jefferson relates an anecdote of Franklin at this period, which is too characteristic to be omitted. He says that, during the discussion, he was a good deal annoyed at the alterations made in his draft, and the strictures of the members-he began indeed to think that it would be so dissected and mangled as to be left a mere skeleton—he adds, that he was sitting beside Franklin, who obser-"Sir-sir," stammered the new husband, | ved that he was not insensible to my disquie-"I married your daughter for love-that pure tude, and that he had long made it a rule to avoid, if he possibly could, becoming the draftsman of any public body, and to this resolition he had come, from the circumstance which come under his observation whilst be was a Journeyman Printer. He reproached her for her infidelity, but he was received with great coldness and abusive railery. On his mentioning the ring and the initials on it she desired him with an insulting smile, to read the letters backward on the ring she had given him, viz: Adieu, for aye! no true love is absent.

At this he was so enraged, that he begged the same favor of her to read his ring in adverse order likewise, and she would find a true signification, viz:

From Hon. BEVIELY TUCKER, Law Professor in William and Mary College. LEE'S SPRINGS, Va. August Vik, T840.

Sir: An accidental meeting with a friend of yours, has determined me to offer you the acknowledgements which I have long felt to be due from me, for the benefits I have received at your hands. Fourteen years ago I was left by a most malignant fever with a diseased liver, a disordered digestion, and a constitution in ruins. My Physicians permitted me to hope, that with care and prudence I might drag on a few years of precarious existence, and assured me that the least ndiscretion must be fatal. Soon efferwards I found myself becoming dyspeptic, and become acquainted with all that indescribable misery which dyspeptics alone can know. This, as usual, grew upon me, tho less rapidly than in most cases, because a conscious ness of my danger put me on my guard, and experie ce had made me familiar with the proper manage-ment of myself. By the constant use of the most approved remedies, the progress of the disease was retarded, and my life was made tolerable, but not comfortable. I rarely ate two meals in regular succession. and for some hours of almost every day, was incapa-ble of any exercise of thought or feeling. A peevish impatience of existence occupied my whole mind.

Two years ago, I met with your Anti-dyspeptis
Pills, and confiding in the accompanying cartificates Has the pleasure of an-nouncing to his friends and I took them according to directions. The result is, the public at large, that he has received from New-York and Philadelphia, an extensive, rich, and fashionable stock of Goods, which he will sell at New York prices

The assortment consists in have my thanks, and to add the assurance of my high respect. B. TUCKER.
