MISCELLANEOUS.

THE HOUR OF FORTUNE.

"We have still a home, my Emily, though it is a poor one," said Ernest Darley to his beautiful young wife, the first day they took possession of their lodgings in an humble Alley in London. "I little thought, when we used to wander in the old woods at Balston, that I should take you to such a miserable abode as this."

'I am happier here, dear Earnest, than in the woods of Balston.'

'Now, by heavens, it makes me angry to see you happy! I believe you would continue to smile and be contented if we were in jail.'

'If we were in jail together, Earnest.'

'Ah! bless you, my own dearest. Fortune cannot continue to frown upon so much goodness.'

'The Christian calls Fortune by a different name. He calls it Providence.'

'Well, Providence, fortune, fate, chance, or whatever other name it rejoices in, cannot surely persecute us for ever. We are guilty of no fault.'

'We married against your uncle's will.—He spurned us from the moment we were united. He must have some reason surely for his detestation of me.'

'What reason can any one have to detest you? You were poor—had he not told me over and over again that he did not care for wealth in the object of my choice? You were young, beautiful, accomplished, my equal in birth—it can't be—it can't be! I tell you it must be something that I have done which makes him enraged.'

'And what have you done, Earnest, that can make him your enemy? You bore with all his humors and caprices; you were affectionate to him as a son; he loved you better than any thing else upon earth. How kind he was to you in your youth, and how well you deserved his kindness! No, no, it is me he persecutes—me he hates.'

'Then may the God of——'

'Hush hush! hush! dear Earnest. He may yet relent.'

'Relent! Ha, ha! Sir Edward Darley relent! I tell you, he makes it one of his boasts, that he never forgave, and never will forgive, even an imaginary offence. Relent! I tell you he is of that stubborn, obstinate nature, the feeling of repentance is unknown to him.'

'Try him, dear Ernest; he cannot be so immovable. Ask him in what we have offended him, and tell him we are anxious to atone for our offence.'

'Have I not written to him? Have I not begged an interview, in terms which I never thought I should have meanness enough to address to mortal man? Have I not besought him at least to inform me what I have done to drawn down his indignation, and has he ever deigned to send an answer? I have left our address here with this scoundrelly attorney in case he should condescend to favor me with a reply.'

At this moment, a knock was heard at the door, and in answer to the 'come in' of Mr. Darley, a lawyer's clerk presented himself, and with no respectful demeanor, held out a letter.

'A letter! From whom?"

'From Mr. Clutchem. Does it wait an answer?' Earnest hurriedly glanced over it.

'No. There—there,' he said as soon as they were again alone. 'Retent, indeed!—Read it.'

Emily took the letter and read.

'Sir, I am desired by Sir Edward Darley, Bart., to inform you that no begging letters will be received; and further, I am desired to inform you, that Sir Edward holds acknowledgements from you for the sum of £3,400, advanced to you while at Oxford. Measures will be taken to exact payment of the full amount forthwith.

Your Ob't. Servant,
SIMON CLUTCHEM.'

'Then we are indeed entirely ruined!"—said Emily, with a sigh.

'Do you doubt it? so we have been any day this three months.'

'But can he really claim the money?'

'I suppose so. He always took my acknowledgements for the amount of my year's allowance, solely, he said, to enable him to keep his books. As he had always taught me to consider myself his heir, I never had thought he would produce them against me; but stay, have you looked on the other page of the note?'

'P. S.—I am further requested to beg your presence to-day, at half past 5, to be witness to an important deed.'

At the appointed hour Ernest was punctually at Mr. Clutchem's office. There, sitting in an easy chair, to his great surprise, he saw his uncle. He approached, with a gush of feeling at his heart, but the baronet fiercely ordered him back.

'Stand there,' he said, 'till I tell you the reason for which I have summoned you here to-day. You recollect the old long-tailed pony you rode when you were a little boy at school, which I turned out for life at your request?'

'I do,' said Ernest, wondering to what this request tended.

'I had him shot the day before yesterday. Your dogs? you no doubt recollect them well! Bruno, and Ponto, and Cæsar—and the old Newfoundland that brought Miss Merrivale—I beg your pardou, Mrs. Ernest Darley, your amiable wife, out of the lake, when your awkwardness upset the boat?'

'I do—the faithful and noble creature.'

'I hanged them all at the same time.—You recollect Abram Andrews whom you installed at the fancy cottage in the Park, and his mother, and his family, that you were so much interested in? They have left the cottage; they have been paupers on the parish some time.'

'Sir!' cried Ernest, 'if you only summoned me here to listen to the recital of such infamous, inhuman'—

'Spare your heroics, young man, you will listen to something more before we part.—But come, we're wasting time. Now hear me. You married that girl. You asked no leave of me. Do you know, Sir, who she was—who her father was, and do you know, sir, what reason I have to hate them? Answer me that, sir.'

'Her father and mother have long been dead, sir. I never knew any cause you could have to dislike them.'

'Dislike!—use better words, sir. Say hate—detest—abhor them. Oh! you did not! you ought to have asked, sir—you would have known that the mother ruined my happiness—that the father attempted to take my life—that I loved her, sir—fiercely—truly—and that she taught me to believe that she returned my love;—till—till it suited her purposes, and she proved herself a'——

'Stay, sir. I will hear no such language applied to the mother of my wife.'

'Your wife! Oh, is she your wife, sir? and has her equipages, no doubt, and her country house, and her town house—your lady wife, sir—and her mother was'——

'I shall stay here no longer, sir.'

'Wait, wait!—Mr Clutchem, is the deed all properly prepared?—word it so that the law can find no flaws in it!

'It is sir Edward.'

'Then give me the pen, Mr. Clutchem, it wants but my signature to make it efficient.

'This deed, Mr. Ernest Darley, is my will, by which I bestow irrevocably, land, houses, money, goods, mortgages, &c. &c. on certain charities, for which I care nothing Sir, but I know that my bequest will be less beneficial, so applied, than by any other means; and I leave you, Sir, and your inestimable wife the baronetcy—oh! I would not have you deprived of that!—and a jail, Sir, and here, Sir, I have called you to be a witness. The ink, the ink, Mr. Clutchem,' he continued, and he held out his pen to dip in the inkstand, keeping his eye still savagely fixed on his unfortunate nephew. The clock struck six—a sudden light flashed into the room—and Ernest thought he heard, for one moment, the creaking of a wheel.

The baronet's hand continued in the same position—his eye still glared upon the countenance of his nephew, and dead silence reigned in the room. At last Mr. Clutchem advanced—'How's this? bless me! Sir Edward is quite cold. Help there—run for Sir Astley. Ah! the passion was too much for him—gone off in a fit. Dead as an unsigned parchment. Sir Ernest, I shall be happy sir, to continue in the service of the family. The rent-roll is in my desk, Sir—fourteen thousand a year. How would you like the funeral conducted. Quite private of course. Honor me by accepting the loan of this two thousand pounds for your immediate expenses. I wish you long life Sir Ernest, and joy of your title, Sir Ernest. Sir Edward shall be carefully buried this day week.

From the Charleston Courier.

LOUISE DELAUNAY.

"'Twas on the 14th of July, (Frenchmen remember the day), the Governor had been summoned to surrender, and his reply was laconic, "never without the command of my King." In a spacious and splendidly furnished room within the Castle, two persons might be seen in earnest conversation—one a tall thin man, very gray, apparently about fifty—it was Achille Delaunay, Governor of the Bastile; the other a beautiful woman of about twenty, she was his daughter, and her name Louise; when something like the following discourse took place: 'Louise' it is in vain you plead, to defend this fortress with my life is a duty which I owe to my King, and I must perform it" "Father" she replied (in a low but fine voice) "do you not owe a higher duty to your God, and do you think he would sanction your obeying the voice of a tyrant, by whose command hundreds of your fellow creatures are groaning in chains." Thinking she had gained a temporary advantage, she proceeded—"Does not the Almighty hear the clanking of those chains; and do you not think he will reward those who assist in severing them? Yes, Heaven, Heaven will reward you, posterity will honor your name; make then a virtue of necessity, (for we can offer but a feeble resistance,) yield the Castle and all France will thank you."—Delaunay paused but it was for a moment; the reason of the moralist soon fell before the stern duty of the veteran. "My daughter," he replied "have I not sworn never to yield this fortress but by order of the King, and are no oaths heard in Heaven as well as chains.—Louise, the Delaunays have served four Kings, and the epithet of traitor has never been coupled with the name. Is it your father you would have to sully that fair name, to tarnish our spotless escutcheon, which has been borne proudly aloft for three centuries? What! shall it be said that Achille Delaunay basely betrayed the trust reposed in him by his king, and was frightened at the shouts and threats of a canaille? No, if every man there was an army, if all France was thundering at the gates, I would maintain this post while I had strength to wield a sword. But, my beloved child, what will become (here his voice faltered, and the beautiful sophist finding that all her reasoning had been in vain, now caught the electric spark of enthusiasm from her father, and finished the sentence he had commenced)—"Of me, father, never fear, Louise Delaunay will this day prove herself not unworthy of the blood that flows through her veins." At this moment they were interrupted by the entrance of a young officer in the uniform of the National Guard; he made a graceful bow to the lady and a military salutation to the Governor, telling him he had come on behalf of the people to offer the garrison their lives, if they would lay down their arms. It is needless to say that the terms met with a haughty refusal from the old soldier. "Tell the people that I received my sword from Louis the sixteenth, and only into his hands will I deliver it. The officer represented to him the awful consequences of a refusal. He remarked that nothing could restrain the fury of the people when once roused. But the Governor was not to be intimidated, he had been cradled in the camp, death had had no terror for him, dishonor had. The officer took his leave, but the first object, upon which his eye rested when he entered and the last when he withdrew, was Louise.—Such was the impatience of the populace, that long before the officer returned, the work of destruction had commenced. The garrison of the Castle consisted of eight invalids and thirty of the Swiss Guard. But if every man had been a Tell, what resistance could they have made against the thousands who opposed them? In every part of the Castle was the heroic girl seen animating and encouraging the troops; three times was the white flag hoisted on the donjon tower, and as many times was it torn down by a hand more snowy than the flag itself.

While preparing wadding in a part of the castle, where a very few of the troops were stationed, a breach was made in the wall, and although she was gallantly defended by four noble Swiss, who fell bleeding at her feet, the enemy succeeded in carrying her out of the Castle. At length finding they were unable to maintain their position, and fearing that the Governor might continue to defend himself until troops should arrive from Versailles to his assistance, it was proposed that they should burn the daughter in the presence of her father, unless the place was instantly surrendered, and the heartless rabble prepared to execute their infernal purposes. She is laid upon a mattrass, the match is applied (no martyr at the stake ever appeared more calm and resigned), her frock is already in a bright blaze, the officer who saw her in the castle, now observes her: he springs from the escalade, and although bayonets bristle on every side, and cannister and grape fly around him, yet on he rushes darting like lightning through the crowd, and dealing death at every blow, but ere the fierce element had reached her angelic form, he bears her triumphantly off. That man afterwards wore the star of the legion of honor.—"Where is my father" was the first words she uttered. "I will save him," replied the officer; but it was too late. Well had the officers predicted that there would be no restraining the fury of the rabble. When the daughter looked again towards the Castle, she saw the headless trunk of her father, hanging from the battlements, while his head placed upon a pike was carried amidst the yells of triumph to the Central Committee at the "place de Greve."

* * * * * * *

What shout is that which rends the air,
'tis the long stifled shout of liberty, 'tis the triumphant huzza of democracy, over the grave of feudal tyranny, and proclaiming to the world that "the Bastile is down."

SADNESS.

There is a mysterious feeling that frequently passes like a cloud over the spirit. It comes upon the soul in the busy bustle of life, in the social circle, in the calm and silent retreats of solitude: Its powers are alike supreme over the weak and iron-hearted. At one time it is caused by the flitting of a single thought across the mind. Again, a doleful sound will come booming across the ocean of memory, gloomy and solemn as the death knell, overshading all the bright hopes and sunny feelings of the heart. Who can describe it, and yet who has not felt its bewildering influence!—Still it is a delicious sort of sorrow; and like a cloud dimming the sunshine of the river, although causing a momentary shade of gloom, it enhances the beauty of returning brightness.

Dr. Humm was once sent for to attend an unfortunate thief, who, in helping himself from a neighbor's wood pile, had been tripped up by a line attached to a spring gun, which gun thereupon went off, wounding the prostrate rogue very sadly. 'It was a very remarkable case,' said the Doctor, 'and I think the only one on record of a man's coming so near losing his life by a trip to the Spring.'

'In union there is strength,' as the chap said when he poured brandy into his water.

PETERS' PILLS.

THE wonderful cures effected by this medicine, are the all engrossing subjects of the day. Go where you will, and you hear of nothing but Mr. Such-a-One has been cured by Dr. PETERS' VEGETABLE PILLS, or, you know Mrs. So-and-So was at the point of death; but she has been cured by Dr. PETERS'S PILLS; or, are you not glad that Miss —— has been restored to health by Dr. PETER'S WONDROUS MEDICINE.

Really, this medicine must be very good, or it could not cure so many. It is good. For many years it has passed on in the "even, silent tenor of its way," curing hundreds of persons who were wrangling with death. But now its onward course is impetuous.

It is as impossible to stay the demand for this medicine, as to hush the rushing winds.

A life medicine that will procrastinate death for many years, shall it not enter every house? Shall it not be used by every individual? Let no man say, I don't want it. You know not what to-morrow may bring forth. All should use this remedy, and remember that health is the first blessing from God.

The immense and increasing popularity of these Pills, is another proof of the infallibility of the old adage, that "truth is powerful and will prevail." Other Pills are only puffed, but Dr. Peters's are purchased and praised, and recommended until the demand for them has become almost universal.

Dr. Peters would impress this fact upon the public, that his Pills are not quack medicine; but a scientific compound of simples, which has been the result of many years' intense application to a profession in which he was regularly bred; hence it is as popular with the regular faculty as with the people at large.

One of the many peculiar virtues of the Vegetable Pills, is, that while very powerful in their effects, they are particularly mild and gentle in their action. Unlike the generality of medicine, their application is never attended with nausea or griping.

Peters's Vegetable Pills are now regarded by those who have had an opportunity to decide upon their merits, as an inestimable public blessing.

Without an exception in any age or country, no medicine has spread with such rapidity and given such universal satisfaction.

☞ The above Pills are for sale in the City of Raleigh, by Messrs. WILLIAMS & HAYWOOD, and W. MASON & Co.; and in Fayetteville, by E. J. HALE, at New York prices.
