JANE HOWARD.

Miss Jane Howard was the daughter of a very wealthy merchant residing in the city of Baltimore.

Her personal appearance was truly prepossessing; but the graces of her mind, polished as it was by the graces of a superior education, and the benevolence of her naturally warm and virtuous heart rendered her an object of universal esteem and admiration.

In the fall of 1828, Jane, with her elder brother, embarked on board a Packet for Charleston, S. C., for the purpose of visiting their friends.

His person was comely and his manners agreeable, with the exception of one fault, too common among sailors; he was profane. The modesty of Jane's appearance attracted his attention; he gained an introduction to her by means of her brother, and was still more charmed by the sweetness of her conversation.

He spent much of his time in her company, charmed and delighted with the modesty of her deportment, and the fascinating spell of her instructive conversation; but not another oath was he heard to utter, until he arrived in Charleston.

They were now about to part, but Jane, feeling no small interest in the welfare of one whose unremitted attentions more than indicated his solicitude for her own, returned to ask if he would grant her own request.

The minister was evidently a man of superior talents; his voice deep-toned and agreeable. His figures were applicable, though high-wrought and beautiful.

He possessed, in fine, the rare faculty of chaining an audience in almost breathless silence from the commencement till the close of his discourse.

home with them, and during the winter his visits were neither few nor far between.

In the spring he married Miss Jane, and they are now on a missionary tour among the dark benighted sons of India, where the blessing of Heaven is attending their labors in a wonderful manner, and many souls are brought to a saving knowledge through their instrumentality.

LOVE AND MARRIAGE.

Mr. CATLIN, in his new work upon Indian character, gives the following graphic sketch of a love scene between Graham, the English friend of Ocoola, and the niece of the unfortunate chief, which the artist has delineated with the pen of a master.

It was on one of those glowing evenings of the sunny south, when the clouds are gilded in splendor in await the departing god of light, after a hard day's toil in pursuit of a tiger, which at last fell wounded by the rifle of Graham, and was finally dispatched by the tomahawk of his swarthy friend, that the young officer first experienced the witchery of love.

Wearied and feverish from excitement, in a climate to which his system had scarcely become reconciled, he gladly accepted the proffered hammock of netted gauze, suspended by Natchleece, Ocoola's niece, beneath the umbrageous wide-spreading branches of a large oak tree, from whose limbs hung the graceful, yet melancholy-looking moss—at times in festoons, at others falling in perpendicular masses, to the length of eight or ten feet; forming a drapery infinitely surpassing in beauty and splendor all the richest and most elaborate works of art.

In this simple, yet ingeniously constructed aerial couch, the young hunter reposed his weary limbs, while Natchleece watched his disturbed sleep, and amused her busy fancy with his delicious mutterings in a language she could not comprehend, whilst she carefully, with a fan made from the feathers of the pinnoway, or wild turkey, brushed away the intrusive mosquitoes, or the no less annoying sand flies.

After a few hours' repose, Captain Graham awoke refreshed, and turning his still half-closed eyes, they rested upon a face of beauty, so peculiar a character, and in such perfect accordance with his own romantic disposition, that his very soul felt suddenly a thrill he had never before experienced.

Beside him stood, in blushing modesty, a perfect child of nature—her dazzling black eyes flashing fire under an excitement entirely new to her unsophisticated and primitive constitution—she felt abashed, yet knew not why— whilst Graham drank deep and largely at the first spring of love, and dwelt with rapture upon the perfect symmetry of her form as she leaned against the huge trunk of the oak under which he had slept.

Natchleece possessed not only a face of loveliness, but a form which might vie in beauty of proportion with the most exquisite productions of the Roman or Grecian sculptor.

Her costume was such as would shock the refined modesty of the more intellectual class of white females; but nature knows no shame but that of sin, and assuredly, if virtue co-exists in purity of thought, sentiment, or action, this artless girl was pure as the fountain which daily reflected her unrivaled charms.

The upper part of her form, according to the custom of her tribe, was left uncovered—her long black hair floated in the winds, unbraided, over her finely proportioned shoulders; and as the zephyrs caught the unconfined tresses, they would play upon a bosom which might have proudly owned Venus herself might have proudly owned her head was surmounted by a tall of feathers, plucked from the wings of the snow-white oriole, or virgin crane, interspersed with those of the gaudy crimson flamingo—the whole confined by pearls of value collected among the islands at the southern extremity of the peninsula of Florida.

She wore a skirt of finch, or lawn a skirt of the softest texture, which was embroidered with minute sea shells, interspersed with pearls of rare beauty and extraordinary magnitude, and further ornamented with strips of ermine skins and a variety of feathers of the richest hue. This lily-like, as it is denominated in the Seminole language, extended from her waist to a little below her knees.

Her beautifully formed legs were encased in unpretentious made of chamois, ornamented at the outside by a double row of beads—a pair of prettily worked moccasins, or Indian shoes, made to correspond with other portions of her dress, completed the attire of the chieftain's niece.

Natchleece was the orphan daughter of a neighboring king, who had been killed in battle, from infancy she had been reared and cherished by her uncle with all the fond affection which a noble minded man feels for a lovely object looking up to him for protection. She was scarcely seventeen when Graham became enamored of her extraordinary sylvan charms.

[From the Boston Empirion.] THE HEIRESS.

A sprightly, rosy-cheeked, flaxen-haired little girl, used to sit on the pleasant evenings of June, on the marble steps opposite my lodgings, when I lived in Philadelphia, and sing over a hundred little sonnets, and tell over many tales in a sweet voice, and with an air of delightful simplicity that charmed me many a time.

Several years had elapsed, during which time I had been absent from the city, when, walking along one of the most fashionable squares, I saw an elegant female figure step into a carriage, followed by a gentleman and two pretty children.

She used to be fond, said he, of treating her little circle of friends with romances—and at last she acted out a neat romance herself. She came out into the gay circle of life under the auspices of her guardians.

She did not wait long, before a gentleman on whom she had looked with a somewhat partial eye, because he was the greatest and handsomest of her lovers, emboldened by her partiality, made her an offer.

which have made away on the wind. It has been remarked by foreigners, that the natives of North Carolina are generally round shouldered. This is undoubtedly owing to a variety of causes, they carry on their heads a green bag, his legal domestics, and sometimes his law books, are deposited in his hat; a physician's hat is not unfrequently an apothecary's shop in miniature; a merchant's hat is crammed with samples of merchandise; at a stage-driver's hat is stuffed with bundles and packages.

The change which has lately been effected in the shape of the hat, has been loudly complained of, as its reduced dimensions put its wearers to much inconvenience. A hat of the most approved modern style, will contain little else than a pocket-handkerchief, a pair of gloves, and a few segars.
