MISCILLANBOWS. AN ADVENTURE.

There are many situations in life that man self and others deemed totally at vafiance assassin. with his nature. I am one whose life has been an undisturbed scene of peace and quietness. No quarrel or dispute ever rendered it necessary for me to call forth my moral or following adventure :

18-; it was towards the cold evenings in spite of all my exertions to move him on. I tivated so charming a female.

The black villiain had ruthlessly dragged [part of the covering off the bed, when the sound of footsteps caused him to turn. He started, and, thus confronted, we stood gazing on each other a few seconds ; his eyes shot fire: and fury was depicted on his countenance. He made a spring at me, and the next moment lay a corpse on the floor. The noise of the nistol aroused the fair sleeper ; she started in the bed, and seemed an angel of the white clouds, emerging from her dow-view was myself, standing near her with a pistol in my hand.

·Oh do not murder me ; take all-vou cannot, will not murder me, sir !"

The servants now rushed in-all was exfrom Virginia. I had the providential opportunity of rescuing one from the worst of fates, who afterwards called me husband, over me, a kind of supernatural feeling indescribable, seemed to arge me to enter .---Having knocked and requested to be conductsat a beautiful girl of about 20 years of age. She rose at my entrance, and seemed a little surprised at the appearance of a perfect stranger. In a few words I related to her the strange-conduct of my horse, and stubborn opposition to my mind.

·1 am not,' I observed ' superstitious nor inclined to the metaphysical doctrines of attempting to pass your house, induced me to solicit lodgings for the night."

. We are not,' she replied, ' well guarded 'tis sure, but in this part of the country we have little to fear from robbers, for we have never heard of any being near us; we are surrounded by good neighbors, and I flatter myself we are at peace with them all. But this evening, in consequence of my father's to your staying; for similar feelings have been mine ere you arrived ; for what cause I cannot imagine.'

The evening passed on delightfully ; my the hours flew quick, and on looking at my watch, I was surprised to find it was eleven o'clock. This was the signal for retiring, and by twelve every inmate of the house was probably asleep save myself. I could not sleep-strange visions floated across my brain, and I lay twisting and turning on the bed, in all the agony of sleepless suspense. The clock struck one; its last vibrating sound had scarcely died away, when the opening of a shutter and the raising of a sash in one of the lower apartments convinced me some one was entering the house. A noise followed, as of a person jumping from the window sill to the floor, and then followed the light and almost noiseless step of one ascending the stairway. I slept in the room adjoining the one occupied by the lady; mine was next the staircase; the step came along the gallery slow and cautious. I had seized my pistol and drew on part of my clothes determined to watch or listen to the movements seemingly mysterious or suspicious; the sound of the step stopped at my door-then followed one as of applying the ear to the key-hole, and a low breathing convinced me the villain was listening. I stood motionless, the pistol firmly grasped. Not a muscle moved, not a nerve was slackened. for I felt as if Heaven had selected me as the instrument to effect its purpose.

The person now passed on. and I as cantiously approached the door of my bed chamber. I now went by instinct, or rather by and booking his name and place of destinalady, he found her free and easy, and from her agreeable manner felt as if he had known her all his life. Evening closed in upon them ed to the lady or gentleman of the house, 1 With evening came twilight, and very shortwas ushered into a next sitting room, where Iy afterwards, darkness. On rumbled the coach, jolting and jerking in a most remarkable manner. It was an act of politeness, doubtless on the part of the gentleman, to ening to which she might be otherwise subjected. He did this with some timidity. a kiss on her nectarian lips. The coach did not travel very quickly, but the enamored youth thought it flew, when he found himself on the following day within a few rods of his uncle's house. He told his fair companion that they must shortly separate, and became quite poetical upon absence, I feel unusually lonesome, and if it the occasion. Spoke of there we meet too might reason as you have, and say I consent romantic speeches, expressive of his deep resoon to part,' and made use of many other gret at being compelled to sever so soon from one who had been as a bright and glorious sunbeam on his earthly pilgrimage, one whose memory would live forever, and a day young hostess was intelligent and lovely; after, in his bosom. To his exceeding surprise, the young lady declared he had been so exceedingly kind that she couldn't think of parting with him, and that she would go with him to his uncle's house.

He told her that he dared not take such a liberty. That he had been in Europe for some years, and that himself a stranger, comparatively, to his uncle, he could not introduce a lady, who was a stranger to him and his relation.

The lady evinced hysterical symptoms his arm again encircled her waist and their lips again owned a secret communion. The coach stopped. The gentleman had arrived at the end of his journey. He bade the lady farewell. It was no go. She insisted upon his protecting her. She got out of the coach with him, and followed him into his uncle's house.

He was in a dreadful state of mind. However pleasant a kiss in the dark was on the previous night, the incumbrance of a petticoat on such an occasion, was any thing but satisfactory. He walked into the parlor, and, with what he conceived to be unblushing impudence, the lady followed. While he was thinking how he could possibly explain the affair, he was welcomed by his uncle, and the young lady was welcomed too, and kissed by all the family .- She was
