MISCELLANEOUS.
THE REWARD OF GENIUS.

BY J. R. B. GARDINER.
They were seated in a rich and shady arbor, over which the creeping vines wandered in every variety of curve, suspending large clusters of their precious fruits, while the atmosphere was laden with the mellow fragrance of the gorgeous plants which grew in wild, untutored luxuriance about the shadowy retreat. The fading light of day yet lingered and gave a rosy hue to the face of the maid who sat therein, as she regarded with mournful tenderness the youth seated at her side.

'Nay, Quintin,' said she, 'not so, it is feeling which actuates me; it is feeling which prompts me to say—It must not be. Had I not feeling for my father, do you think I would act contrary to my own desire—would cause your unhappiness?'

'Is this your love?' said the other, with a tone of fretfulness. 'Methinks it cannot be a very ardent flame which is so easily extinguished by the perverse and obstinate tyranny of a—'

'Stay your words,' interrupted she, as she laid her delicate hand tenderly on his lips.— 'You will respect the father, if you esteem his child.'

The noble mind of the youth was struck with reproof, and although it was averse to his desires, her filial obedience told of so much pure and holy excellence, that he instantly made reparation.

'Forgive me, dearest,' he entreated; 'I spoke hastily and unworthily myself; but your words have crazed my soul, which builds its happiness on the possession of you. It may not be that I shall be your husband; oh, promise me that no other shall.'

'I would fain do so,' sighed the afflicted virgin, 'but if my father commands can I disobey? I have had no mother's care since childhood, but have scarce felt the loss; he has thrown by the coldness of man, and been a very woman in his affection to me. Shall I repay his kindness with ingratitude?—Quintin, if he tells me to love another, I cannot do so; but if he bids me wed—Quintin, you do not venture me?'

The expiring rays of the setting sun fell on her features, as she earnestly glanced upon her lover.
'Ah!' cried the youth, with a sudden start, as he struck his hand upon his brow, 'why that blush, that agitation? Deceive me not, Eliza, you are not supposing a case. This has already happened. I see it all.—He has selected a bridegroom.'

The maid sank her head upon her bosom, and through her struggling tears, she sobbed, 'Quintin, thou hast said it!'

Desperate was the conflict in the bosom of the youth as he sat like one in a trance, his eyes fixed on hers, which like the sun, breaking through the clouds of the passing storm, gleamed from under their dripping lashes, and soon he dreamed he saw the rainbow of hope.
'Who is my rival?' he asked with a voice scarcely audible.
'Van Deg,' she said sorrowfully.
'Do you love him, Eliza?'

shouted, and gay equipages passed by. It was a day of public rejoicing, for Eliza, the daughter of Argini, was to wed Van Deg; the nation's favorite, the celebrated painter. People recounted the scenes he had delineated, and lauded the artist to the skies. All this grated in the mind of the dreamer, but he trembled and the cold perspiration gathered on his forehead as the nuptial cavalcade approached; they halted at the chapel, and the groom conducted the bride, all pale and trembling, to the altar; he looked up the aisle, as the father was about giving his love away, he rushed up and seized her, she shrieked and fell dead in his embrace; her relations and the priest all gazed in horror; he raised his eyes, saw the mystery in their countenances, and as his face fell upon the bosom of his lovely bride, he expired—and that moment he awoke. Still the forms were before his eyes, fresh in his recollection as if he beheld the awful scene by the noon-day sun. Impelled by an unaccountable impulse, he arose and lighted his lamp, and taking a coal from the extinguished embers in the chimney, he commenced the portraiture of the group upon the wall; as he drew each face, each lineament, he recoiled in surprise as their perfect resemblance to the individuals became more and more impressed upon him. As he concluded the outline, he beheld in it a faithful transfer of his dream wanting nothing but the variety of color. A thousand thoughts darted through his brain; he was wild and wandering; he threw himself on his bed, and when he next awoke the rays of the rising sun gilded his apartment.

His first object was to seek the moral picture, and trembled lest it had all been a dream; but there it stood, as if executed by a magic power.

'If this is the result of an effort with charcoal,' cried he striking his breast in a delirium of joy, 'what might I not effect with other means? What might be my reward? As daylight sought its slumbers in the bosom of the night, the lovers were again together.

'I am doing wrong,' murmured Eliza in meeting you again since I am an affianced bride. This night must be our last. It is a sad thing to part with those we love yet I act as virtue dictates, and we must meet no more as—'

'Say not that we shall meet no more as lovers! Say that we shall meet no more; that will be sufficiently severe; for, Eliza, could we meet but to love—to upbraid fate which so cruelly divides us?'

'I must away,' said the girl; 'if Quintin's affection is pure, he will condemn me for tarrying.'

'Farewell, then, sweetest! If I lose thee I will wander to some far and distant clime, and try to bury my regrets in new scenes, and amid new companions.'

He imprinted a kiss on her willing lips. He watched her retiring form as it appeared and disappeared amid the foliage at intervals, till it was finally lost to his anxious view—then turned slowly and sadly away.

Never did a father love his daughter with more fondness than Argini his child Eliza.— Her good was his great aim; and as he was an enthusiast in the art of the pencil, he deemed that one of that profession would be most worthy of his child. These two passions of his soul mingled together in such a manner that they became as one. He considered the canvass as a lasting monument for genius, and that he would best consult his daughter's happiness by uniting her to one who would be alive to posterity by his works.

Van Deg had been therefore selected, as he was the boast of his country, and all the figures of his creation wanted nothing but motion to make them such as their originals. Besides, he was wealthy, and would add to the wealth of the family. Finally, his daughter was not old enough now to judge for herself! and though she had confessed that she was prejudiced against her proposed husband, a few years of amiable intercourse would overcome that, and she would ultimately be benefited.

Just as he was at this point of his reflections on the ensuing day, a letter carrier entered his apartment and handed him a letter, saying he would wait without for an answer, and had been bound by an oath not to disclose who had commissioned him to deliver the communication.
Argini was astonished at these words, and as soon as the others retired, broke the seal and read—
'If the parent consulted the daughter's happiness, would he not enquire from her if she does not love another? I think she does. But if Van Deg is to possess the fair being, may I be mistaken! May her marriage to the man of your choice not hurry her to another world! Her obedience causes her to submit, I lay claim to her affections; but with these do not pretend to alter your determination. You have the reputation of patronizing merit as it appears in painting. Defer the nuptials to this day twelve months, and let Van Deg on that day place his chef-d'oeuvre on the left of the altar. If the one which appears on the right does not tell of a more skillful master, I abide the result. If it does, then it is but fair to leave to your daughter the privilege of choosing her partner from the two.'

A year passed away, during which the lovers never met. Eliza had lost sight of Quintin, and in answer to her enquiries concerning him, all she had been able to learn was, that shortly after their last interview he had left the city, and gone, no one knew whither.

The day was now arrived when she was to become a wife. Sad in her were the kind offices of bride's maids who assisted at her toilet; yet she sustained a smile upon her face, although her soul was weighed down by grief.

The chapel was thronged by people anxiously to view the ceremony, and as the bride richly clad, was led to the altar by her father, the latter announced that her hand was to be bestowed on the artist whose skill was most undeniable, to be determined by the merit of the picture which stood veiled on either side of the altar. Van Deg glanced triumphantly around, and, striding to the picture he had painted, he uncurtained it to their view.

A burst of applause rose from the audience as he did so—and well merited was that cry of approbation.
The scene of the piece was the chapel in which they stood, and the whole represented to the life. There was the priest, all but breathing, while the bride and groom and their friends appeared as in the full flush of joy.

Argini was about to speak in raptures of the performance, when suddenly the other curtain was drawn aside, and a cry of horror burst from the multitude as they pressed forward to behold. Van Deg gazed breathless in wonder, and Argini uttered a wild shriek of despair—'my daughter!' It was the delineation of Quintin's dream—each countenance in the picture was easy to recognize except that of the youth, which was buried in the bosom of the bride. But ere, with wondering eyes, they had fully scanned it all, it was thrust aside and another appeared in its place. This represented a lovely arbor in which Argini was advanced in age, dangling a beautiful infant on his knee, which bore an expression in its face of Eliza, who sat on an opposite seat with her head resting on the bosom of a young man, whose arm encircled her waist.

Every one was charmed and delighted beyond measure, and as they beheld the youth they recognized him in a moment, and every tongue cried,
'The Blacksmith!'
'Blacksmith no more,' said Quintin stepping from behind the canvass, 'but the Artist who demands his reward.'

It is unnecessary to say more than that genius was rewarded; and to the happy husband, Quintin Mafarys, once Blacksmith of Antwerp, the world owes some of its finest relics of art, and among the rest, the mimetic painting of 'The Miser,' now at Windsor Castle.

THE REV. ALBERT SMEDES, of the City of New York, designs to open a SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES in the City of Raleigh, N. C., on the 12th day of May next.
This Institution is to furnish a thorough and elegant Education, equal to the best that can be obtained in the City of New York, or in any Northern School.
The School Buildings, situated in a beautiful and elevated Oak grove, furnish the most spacious accommodations. The Dormitories are separated into Alcovs, for two Young Ladies each, of a construction to secure privacy and at the same time a free circulation of air.
Every article of furniture is provided by the School, except bedding, (beds will be furnished) and towels.
The year will be divided into two terms of five months each. The former commencing, after the 1st term, on the 15th of May, and terminating on the 15th of October. The latter commencing on the 20th of November and terminating on the 20th of April.
Pupils will be admitted at any age desired.
No Pupil, except by a written request of the Parent or Guardian to the Rector of the School, will be allowed to have an account at any Store or Shop in the City. A disregard of this prohibition will be followed by an immediate dismission from School.
Day-Scholars will be received from such Parents or Guardians as reside in the place.
The year will be divided into two terms of five months each. The former commencing, after the 1st term, on the 15th of May, and terminating on the 15th of October. The latter commencing on the 20th of November and terminating on the 20th of April.

"DISEASE A UNIT
Impurity of the BLOOD the only Disease.
How simple, yet how wise, how good and how true are all the laws of nature! Simplicity and truth are stamped upon every law of the creation.— The mighty words which roll in space in every degree of velocity and direction are all governed by attraction of matter to matter. This principle governs the human body. Brandreth's Vegetable Universal Pills, attract all impurities of the blood to the bowels, which organ expels them from the body. Attraction and disease are both units. All accidents or infections only affect the body in proportion as they occasion impurity of the blood.
The bowels for instance are coactive—the most important organ is closed—the consequence is a great accumulation of impurities, which, as they cannot get out by their usual passage, are forced into the blood, occasioning impurity of blood. Thus Fevers, Chills, Rheumatism, Coughs, and Colics are often produced. But let Brandreth's Pills be used in such doses as will effectually evacuate the bowels, and health is restored at once.
The unworthy have counterfeited the Doctor's Medicine so extensively, that his travelling Agent is now taking in all the old boxes, and putting new ones of a different figure, with 25 Pills in their place. Some are just received at WILLIAM PECK'S Office, Raleigh, March 1, 1842. 18—1y
