THE CONFIDENTIAL CLERK.

And, in a word, but even now worth this, And now worth nothing. Shall I have the thought To think on this?—MERCHANT OF VENICE.

"Have you heard any thing about those drafts on Pierce and Lunham, Hawkins?" was the enquiry of Mr. Ockham, as he entered his counting room, "after change," one day during the Spring of 1837.

"Nothing, sir," was the prompt but quiet reply of his confidential clerk, as with a countenance somewhat pale, and slightly tremulous hand, he laid upon the desk of his employer, several bank notices of an early date, and to a large amount.

"Indeed, Hawkins, but that is strange," replied the merchant, in a tone that faltered a little—"what have you there?"

The clerk laid another paper upon the desk, and returned to his labors. That peculiar but expressive stillness, which sometimes pervades the counting room of large mercantile houses, was here broken only by the guarded movements of the clerks, as with clock-work regularity and despatch they answered the various calls from the sales-room. After a moment of anxious suspense, Mr. Ockham again summoned his confidential clerk to his desk.

"Hawkins, what can this mean?" He pointed to a protested note for a very large amount, drawn in his favor, and bearing his own endorsement.

"These are dreadful times, sir," said the clerk, in a deep, anxious tone.

"Well!" added the merchant quickly, and fixing his brilliant but troubled eye upon the countenance of the other.

"I trust indeed, sir, there is some mistake here," replied Hawkins, almost unconsciously.

"Mistake, Hawkins! these men are not apt to make mistakes—impossible."

"What is to be done then, sir?"

"For us, you know, but one thing is to be done, in this case. The paper must be withdrawn from the bank forthwith—can we raise the money?"

The clerk shook his head doubtfully.

"Our friends in Wall street," replied Mr. Ockham—"it is our last resort, for I looked over the bank account yesterday; and you know we have calculated closely, even for the two months to come. Let me see—those drafts—but these are already applied to take care of our own paper."

"True indeed, sir, and my success yesterday was so indifferent that I almost despair of the ordinary sources. The money may be had, perhaps, in Wall street, at a rate beyond—"

"Never, Hawkins, never. I will not dishonor myself—I will not risk the future reproaches of a conscience which is now clear, by resorting to such desperate and sinful means; for sinful they are, and in these times doubly so—when we know not how long we may escape the general overthrow."

"Then, Mr. Ockham," replied the clerk, "we must try our friends once more. I will do my utmost."

"Thank you—be prompt then, for it is now two o'clock. I will be at home at 8."

Hawkins put up his books and departed on his mission, with what results an hour was to determine.

The evening came.

In his quiet happy parlor, in the midst of a small but happy domestic circle, which was indeed a world to him as William Hawkins, relieved for a brief but blissful period from the toils and anxieties of business. But what a different man from him we saw in the morning in that still dingy counting room! The countenance then so pale and anxious was now radiant with smiles, and his eye shone with the innocent and unrestrained gaiety of an honest and generous heart. One lovely child, a beautiful little girl of six years, his only child, sat upon his knee. Her innocent prattle had long ago driven away all the grim shadows which haunted his spirit during the day.

"When shall we go live in the country, father?" was one question among the thousand which fell from her lips—new ones being conceived before the old were answered.

"When?" replied the father, turning to his wife with a smile—"why, when the birds come and the flowers."

"Oh, the pretty birds, and the sweet flowers!" exclaimed the happy little girl, throwing her arms around his neck and kissing him—"mother, how glad I am!"

"So am I, my love," replied the mother, exceedingly youthful and interesting in her appearance, but on whose countenance the traces of recent sickness were too plainly visible. "Is it indeed so William?"

"Yes, my dear; I am now in hopeful treaty for that pleasant little place at Ravenswood, which we visited last summer, and should have concluded the purchase some days ago, as I told you, had I not been terrified at what I still consider an extravagant price.—But I think we shall get it on such terms as we can afford. Nay, Mary, I ought to pay any price within my means, when the restoration of your health is in question."

"Thank you, my dear, you are too good!" she bent over the book she was reading, that her husband might not see the grateful tears that were starting to her eyes.

The mantel clock struck the hour for family worship. William Hawkins sat down to the scripture and after a chapter feelingly read, he offered up, as the priest of the little household which God had committed to his keeping, the simple but eloquent prayers which his church had provided.

"Mother," said little Emily, as her mother took her hand, in preparation for retiring, "will it be any harm if I dream about our country house to night?"

"No, my dear," replied the mother, "but you must not forget your prayers, for God will bless only those that love and serve him."

The little girl clambered upon her father's knee to receive his parting kiss, and in a few moments she left the room with her mother.

A note had been left upon the table by the servant on retiring from prayers, which he now opened. A sickly change came over his countenance as he read the contents.—"The negotiation for funds, which he had considered as almost settled at three o'clock, could not be effected."

"What is the matter, my dear?" said his wife, as she took her seat at his side. He raised his head from his hands, and sighed deeply.

The cause of his trouble was soon explained.

"What can we do, Mary?" he added. "I have tried every source, and ten thousand dollars are yet wanting. These are awful times, and I fear for the result. We were prepared for some disappointment, but this is crushing. Had I the money—"

The pale face of his wife became suddenly illuminated with a beautiful enthusiasm.

"William, you have—you have all that is needed."

Hawkins looked at her a moment, and the glow began to kindle upon his own cheek. He sighed again, as he took her hand and replied: "Noble woman, I understand you, and such a thing may be due to my generous employer. But, Mary, think, in these times, we risk our all—and then what is to become of our country project?"

"William, I can cheerfully give this up for the present year, if necessary. Let us prove to Mr. Ockham that we are grateful. Remember what we were when he employed you. Nay, William," she added, as her beautiful eyes filled with tears, "let him have it if we lose it all. At the worst, we shall have the income from my aunt's legacy, which will be enough for our simple wants."

"Four hundred dollars, my dear, is—"

"Well, William, have we not lived for years on a less sum?"

"But our daughter—"

Mrs. Hawkins raised her eyes, involuntarily, to Heaven. Her husband understood the mute but eloquent appeal. He hesitated no longer.

"My dear, it shall be done, if necessary. A noble benefactor has Mr. Ockham been to us, and he should be served with our best. My hour for calling upon him has arrived. Farewell, I will be at home by nine."

St. John's had just struck eight when the clerk gained entrance to the house of Mr. Ockham. The merchant was in his private chamber, and desirous to see him there. As he ascended the stairs, he caught a glimpse of a large and happy family circle through the open parlor door. He scarcely knew why but his heart sank within him as he passed. Mr. Ockham was pacing the floor as he entered. He stopped, and extended an open letter to his clerk as he entered, saying, as he did so—

"Hawkins, the express has brought me rather an unwelcome gift."

Hawkins saw the contents at a single glance, "Dishonored, sir?"

"Dishonored," Hawkins, there is no trust in man." He said this with bitter emphasis "that and the protest together—but have you succeeded?"

"The Whippers are short themselves, but—"

"But what—come to the point."

"I hope the money can be paid."

"Hope—I am sick of hope. Two hopes among the fairest have been blighted in one day. I must have certainties now—or you know the consequence, Hawkins?"

"You misunderstand me, sir. I know that the money can be had. Ten or twelve thousand will cover the demand—it is yours."

"When and on what terms?"

"It will be subject to your check to-morrow, sir, and as for the terms—"

"He hesitated.

"The terms—you hesitate, have you been dabbling with the two per-centers? I have you dard, after what I said this morning—"

"Mr. Ockham," responded the clerk, proudly, and his cheek and brow became suddenly suffused with crimson. There was sorrow, anger, and wounded pride in the unfinished glance with which he met Mr. Ockham's gleaming eye.

"Nay, pardon me," replied the merchant, while his own cheek colored with shame at all temptations, and I was hasty; but the terms, man, the terms."

"The terms may be as you please, Mr. Ockham."

"Nay, Mr. Hawkins; I can't understand this. Where is the money to come from?"

It is lodged in the Bank of America, in my name, and I shall transfer it to your account in the morning."

The truth flashed at once upon the mind of the merchant. He knew the other's circumstances; he knew his plans; his cherished desire in regard to the country house. For the first time, he was overcome in the presence of his clerk. He sat down silently, motioning Hawkins to be seated, and more than one large tear appeared on his cheek. The impulses of a generous nature, though awakened by one artless but master-touch of sympathy, struggled for a moment with his professional pride, and for a moment only.

"Hawkins, you distress me," he exclaimed; "and will you make this sacrifice, will you, I will not mince matters—incur this hazard for me? No, no, my generous fellow, anything but that."

"Mr. Ockham," replied the other, "you will give me deep pain if you refuse me. Ten times the sum, even if it should please Him, in whom we both trust, to scatter ruin upon your noble house, could not repay the debt I owe you!"

"But your wife and child. No, William, I cannot think of it."

"My wife, sir, taught me the lesson which I have attempted thus feebly to repeal. Our sleep will be all the sweeter, if we know that yours is peaceful. Allow me to speak plainly, Mr. Ockham. I believe, before Heaven, that it is as much your duty to accept this poor service at my hand, as it is mine to give it. I can never think that it is the will of God that you, nobly useful as you are, should be sacrificed through recklessness of desperate and unprincipled men, so long as I have an arm to defend you from ruin."

Mr. Ockham made no immediate reply. He arose and paced the floor for a few minutes, with hurried steps. At length he returned, and took the hand of his clerk.

"William you must have security. Let my attorney execute a mortgage upon this house; and let it be prepared by ten to-morrow. So good night. Nay, no scruples, he added, as he saw the peculiar expression upon the countenance of the other: does this give you pain; have it then upon your own terms, but let the mortgage be prepared at any rate."

The slumbers of the merchant and his clerk that night were alike peaceful and refreshing.

SALE TO-MORROW,

At the Court House, April 23d,
at 11 o'clock, A. M.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE

IN THE CITY OF RALEIGH, AND ITS VICINITY—FOR SALE.

THE subscribers, as Executors of the last Will and Testament of JOSEPH GALE, deceased, will expose to public sale at the Court House, in the City of Raleigh, on Saturday, the 23d day of April ensuing, the following described property, viz:

The Dwelling House and Lot in the City of Raleigh, situated on Fayetteville street, nearly opposite the residence of William H. Hayward, Jr., Esq. and formerly occupied by Jane McGuffie. The House is two story one, with eight rooms, six of which have fire-places, and the lot has on it all requisite out-buildings.

An unimproved acre lot, described in the plan of the City of Raleigh as No. 38, but better known as Wheeler's Spring Lot—on which there is one of the purest and most copious springs of water in the county.

A number of vacant building Lots, just without the Corporation limits, near the premises of Charles Manly, Esq. containing from a quarter to half an acre and offering convenient settlements for persons of limited means.

Twenty-two acres of unenclosed Land, adjoining the City on the East, the Stone Quarry being the extreme boundary. The land is said to be of good quality, and late, probably, timber enough on it to fence it around; though its proximity to the Quarry will render a rock fence nearly or quite as cheap as a rail one.

A very valuable tract of land, nine miles west of Raleigh, containing upwards of eighteen hundred acres. To suit purchasers, this tract will be divided into lots of three or four hundred acres each. This body of land lies on the waters of Swift and Williams' creeks, in as high and healthy a region as there is in North Carolina, and offers a fine location for invalids of the low country, who may desire summer residences in this part of the State. Three hundred acres only have been cleared—the balance lies in its natural state, covered with a luxuriant growth of walnut, hickory, oak and pine. There is on the premises, a frame dwelling house, and all necessary out-buildings; an excellent orchard, and fine meadow. A portion of the tract is rich bottom land, and the residue strong high land which produces well. The range for stock is also excellent.

Three hundred acres of pine land, adjoining the last named tract.

Thirty-five acres of land, about three miles North of the Paper-mill, on the waters of Mine creek, formerly belonging to Nathan Hartfield.

Nineteen acres of land, adjoining the last described tract.

The whole of the above will be sold without reserve, to the highest bidder. The conditions of the sale will be Six and Twelve months credit, the purchaser giving bonds with security, to be approved of by the Executors.

WESTON H. GALES, } Executor.
THO. L. WEST, }
WILL. PECK, }
Raleigh, March 14, 1842. 23—114

N. B. There are also several Slaves for sale, belonging to the Estate, but by the provisions of the Will, they are to be sold privately. Among them is a good Freeman, a Carriage Driver, and one of the best field hands in the State. Persons desirous of purchasing, will apply to the Executors. Six months credit will be given to the purchasers of the slaves.

"DISEASE A UNIT

Impurity of the BLOOD the only Disease.

HOW simple, yet how wise, how good and beautiful are all the laws of nature! Simplicity and truth are stamped upon every law of the creation.—

The mighty worlds which roll in space in every degree of velocity and direction are all governed by attraction of matter to matter. This principle governs the human body. Brandreth's Vegetable Uranium Pills, attract all impurities of the blood to the bowels, which organ expels them from the body. Attraction and disease are both united. All accidents or infections only affect the body in proportion as they occasion impurity of the blood.

The bowels for instance are confined—this most important organ is closed—the consequence is a great accumulation of impurities, which, as they cannot get out by their usual passage, are forced into the blood, occasioning impurity of blood. Thus Fevers, Obstructions, Rheumatism, Coughs, and Colds are often produced. But let Brandreth's Pills be used in such a case, and will effectually evacuate the bowels, and health is restored at once.

The unworthy have counterfeited the Doctor's Medicine so extensively, that his travelling Agent is now taking to all the old boxes, and putting new ones of a different figure, with the following inscription:—Some are just rags at WILLIAM PECK'S Office, Raleigh, March 1, 1842. 16—11

BRANDRETH'S VEGETABLE URANIUM PILLS.

THESE PILLS have now been more than eight years before the Public, and their just pretensions to be decided, and their efficacy examined and tested by a great number of persons, too intelligent to be deceived, and too deeply interested in the results not to observe with care, and judge with favor. Experience has not weakened their pretensions, but strengthened and confirmed them; a mass of testimony of such respectable character, as has never sustained any article in this form in any country.—

The original design was to relieve Dyspepsia, and those functional derangements upon which it commonly depends. They were however found, preserving the stomach and bowels in a healthy state of action, to tend greatly to ward off those "bilious attacks," to which many are liable, but not so as to induce the "biliousness" of the term. These, therefore, who expected in them an active purgative (though it is not), are such, may have been disappointed; yet few instances of failure have been ascertained among those who have faithfully employed the article according to the design, where relief might reasonably have been expected. In addition to this habitual dyspepsia, those who from custom or from necessity, as in traveling or business, take their meals hastily, find in the use of these Pills great protection or relief; from consequent occasions of attacks of indigestion; and indeed, all whose habits or pursuits are sedentary, may take them with safety and benefit.

The chief objection urged against them is, that they encourage indolence in the pleasures of the table by the immunity they give from the painful effects of excess. That the public may feel assured that no imposition is attempted to be practised upon them, the Proprietor has obtained permission to refer to the following gentlemen, (among many others) who, from personal experience of the efficacy of these Pills, are willing to recommend them to their friends, viz:—

Mr. Van Buren, late President of the U. States, Hon. George E. Badger, S. J. D., late Justice of the Supreme Court, Hon. D. D. Bishop of North Carolina, Hon. James Iredell, late U. S.
