HOW TO COMMIT MATRIMONY.

In a work written some years ago, by John Taylor, of London, it is related that Horne Tooke, being in company with a gentleman just on the point of fulfilling a matrimonial engagement, observed that he was once in in imminent danger of matrimony, but was deterred by an old friend, to whom he looked with reverence for his wisdom and experience, and who gave him the following ad-

"You must first, said he, consider the person of the lady, and endeavor to satisfy vourself that, if she has excited, she is likely so secure your admiration. You must deeply scrutinize her mind, and reflect whether she possesses a rate of intellect that would be likely to render her an intelligent have no reason to object to their being your will be 12 mo relations and companions, you must inquire who and what are her friends, for you must not expect to sacrifice all her old connexions when she becomes your wife; and if you find them agreeable people, and not likely to be burdensome or intrusive, and are quite satisfied with the prospect, you may then order your wedding clothes, and fix the day for the marriage. When the bride is dressed suitable for the occasion, the friends at church, and the priest ready to begin, you should get on your horse and ride away from the place as fast and as far as your horse can carry you."
