THE CONVICT'S FATE.

So before, behind, around like an armament of cloud, the black fate labors onward.—HEMANS.

On the — day of March, 18—, might have been seen, in the county town of L—, an unusual collection of people of every age, size and sex. All the public houses were filled to overflowing, and still there were many strangers unable to obtain shelter, but the inhabitants of the village, with generous hospitality, threw open their doors, and made the company welcome. The cause of this concourse is soon told. The day succeeding the one above mentioned, had been set apart to inflict the utmost punishment of the law on a criminal then lying in the prison. He was a man large in stature, and of powerful strength. He had a short time before, in a moment of passion, taken the life of one of his most intimate friends, a young man of promising talents, and universally respected by a large circle of relatives and friends. The criminal was arrested the day after the murder, tried, and sentenced to death; and that sentence was to be carried out upon the morrow.

The day appropriated for the execution, was one of the most delightful of the season. The sun rose with unusual splendor. But for one being, that luminary had no bright rays—to him there was no joy—no contentment—no happy tranquil feelings, swelling the heart with love and adoration. Desperate with the thoughts of an ignominious death, he lay upon the floor of his cell, overloaded with chains, revolving in his mind some bold attempt at an escape; escape when naught but death stared him in the face—escape, when the very hope seemed the madness of despair! How was this to be accomplished? He was to be removed from the prison-house to the place of execution, which was about a mile distant, guarded by a portion of the Militia of the County, carrying arms charged with ball cartridges. The only chance for escape would be when he was being removed from the cart to the scaffold, as at that period there would be the least suspicion of his intention. The attempt was desperate, but it was resolved upon.

At length the criminal was brought forth, clothed in the customary dress, and placed in the cart upon the coffin intended to receive his lifeless remains. He was pale and dejected; but with none of his energies impaired by long confinement. His eye, that no suffering could dim, flashed with more than its wonted brilliancy. The prison was built upon an eminence, and upon the spot where he now stood, he could look down upon the preparations for his death, and calculate his chances for his escape. One piercing glance revealed every thing—that glance proved sufficient.

The procession moved slowly on. The bell, suspended in the cupola of the prison-house, tolled forth in single and dolorous notes, announcing the awful tidings of death; the crowd in front of the scaffold was immense, but behind, scarcely any persons were collected, in consequence of the ground being damp and marshy, and not affording as fine a view of the approaching spectacle as that in front, which being slightly elevated, gave those farther off as good an opportunity of viewing the scene as those immediately under the scaffold.

As the Sheriff motioned him out of the cart, the Prisoner, apparently downcast and dejected, slowly rose and ascended the scaffold, but it was only a moment, before he had sprung into the midst of the armed force below, and with the strength of a giant, opposed every endeavor to stop his progress. Life was before him—death was behind. He well knew that if retaken he would be shown no mercy, and it were as well to meet his death from the hands of those around him, as from the instrument of the law. With a tremendous effort he cleared the soldiery. Immediately a dozen muskets poured forth their murderous contents at his person, but he passed the ordeal harmless. Struck with astonishment at the suddenness of the effort, the populace remained for a moment inactive, and then with a loud shout started in pursuit—but that moment of indecision gave the Prisoner the advantage. Nothing could now stop his progress. Once only, a man in advance of the rest, threw himself in the path before the criminal—but, with an heroic grasp, the liberated convict seized and crushed him to the earth. On, on, he sped. Mile after mile, hill after hill was passed, but still his pursuers were close behind. Oh! what hopes passed through that wretched being's mind, as with the swiftness of the deer, he fled for life. What resolutions of reform! What deeds of virtue to be done, presented themselves to his imagination! It was a glorious thing to defraud death, to leap from the grave at the moment he felt himself sinking in. But what sight is that which meets his eye? Directly in front of him he perceives a vast body of fire glowing and burning immediately in his path. The sight caused his energies to slacken—he drops, nearly exhausted—his pursuers approach nearer. He hears their shouts, and once more he springs forward. He draws nearer to that vast body of fire, but as he approaches, how changed the aspect before him. Joy! joy! instead of fire, he now perceives the broad and majestic river, rolling on her downward course, her placid bosom reflecting the beams of the noon day sun, until the whole surface glowed like burnished silver.

In a moment he was on the bank. Invigorated and cheered by newly-born hopes, his eye ranged the shore in every direction, but not a boat was to be seen. His pursuers were close behind him. But at length he detected a small skiff that was anchored about twenty yards from the shore, and which his anxiety had caused him at first to overlook. Without hesitation, he plunged into the stream, and had scarcely reached the boat before his pursuers were on the bank. But he was safe from them. Fortunately for him there was a solitary paddle in the bottom of the boat, and, hastily slipping the rope over the stake to which it was secured, he darted out into the stream. In vain those congregated upon the shore searched for another boat in which to continue the pursuit, not one was to be found. Maddened with rage at being baffled, at the moment they thought escape was impossible, some sprang into the water to endeavor to reach the convict by swimming; but it was useless. They could not overtake their intended victim. Stopping for one moment, he stood upright in his frail bark, and gave a loud laugh of defiance; then resuming his seat, he directed his course to the opposite shore. All fear had now fled. Once within the lines of the British possession in Canada, it would be no difficult matter to secrete himself until a favorable opportunity presented itself for departing to the old world. But those shores he was destined never to reach. A more terrible death than that from which he had escaped awaited him.

The part of the river at which he attempted to cross, was one that, unless superior skill was manifested, rendered the boatmen liable to extreme danger. It was but a very short distance from the rapids that are generally considered the commencement of the Falls of Niagara. At all seasons there is a very strong current leading to this point; but at this time the force of the current was considerably augmented, on account of a heavy freshet that had swollen the river to an unusual degree, thereby causing a greater body of water to rush toward the Falls. The convict, whose mind was occupied with other thoughts, was not aware of this circumstance until he found himself gradually drawing closer to the terrible descent. At length, however, his eyes were opened to the extent of his danger. He at once perceived that there was no time for deliberation, and using every effort in his power, he applied his oar. For a moment the boat stood still, and then slowly moved on the stream; but before it had proceeded many yards, the paddle that he held in his hand, unable to resist such an unusual pressure, snapped asunder close to the handle. The blade shot far, far from his reach, and beyond all possibility of recovery. Who can tell his emotion at this juncture? In a moment all the actions of his past life rushed through his mind; the few good deeds vanished like the morning mist before the many evil ones that now rose up before him in accusation. But one struck more terror into his soul than all the rest. It was the murder of his late victim. He fancied he beheld the sufferer, pale and bloody, rising before him. His flesh crept, his eyes rolled horribly, and he chafed each other under his pale cheek. "Oh, God!" he cried, "if succor could arrive, how willingly would I yield up life upon the scaffold! Once more his energies appeared to revive. He sprang up in the boat, and, with a maddened effort, seized and tore the only seat from its place, and used every endeavor to steam the current that was carrying him to his death. But how vain was the effort! All hope had now fled; he was in the rapids, and whirling on with the velocity of lightning. Another breathless pause and he is at the brink of the falls. One moment more and the murderer stands in the presence of his God.

About a week after the day upon which the above events transpired, the lifeless remains of a man were taken from the river several miles below the falls. The remains were large in stature, and from the proportions of the body, were supposed, when possessed with life, to have been endowed with almost superhuman strength. No one could be found to recognize the body, the features being so mutilated. But by more than one it was supposed to be all that was left of one who had escaped death in one form, only to meet him in another more terrible. T. S.

"DISEASE A UNIT Impurity of the BLOOD the only Disease. HOW simple, yet how wise, how good and beautiful are all the laws of nature? Simplicity and truth are stamped upon every law of the creation—The mighty worlds which roll in space in every degree of velocity and direction are all governed by the laws of nature. This principle governs the human body. Brandreth's Vegetable Universal Pills, attract all impurities of the blood to the bowels, which organ expels them from the body. Attraction and disease are both units. All accidents or infections only affect the body in proportion as they occasion impurity of the blood.

The bowels for instance are costive—this most important organ is closed—the consequence is a great accumulation of impurities, which, as they cannot get out by their usual passage, are forced into the blood, occasioning impurity of blood. Thus Fevers, Cholics, Rheumatism, Coughs, and Colds are often produced. But let Brandreth's Pills be used in such doses as will effectually evacuate the bowels, and health is restored at once.

The unworthy have counterfeited the Doctor's Medicine so extensively, that his travelling Agent is now taking in all the old boxes, and putting new ones of a different figure, with 25 Pills in their place. Some are just received at WILLIAM PECK'S Office. Raleigh, March 1, 1842. 18—1y

Have you a Cough? Don't neglect it! Sherman's Cough Lozenges, are the most sure and effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumptions, Whooping Cough, Asthma, Tightness of the Lungs or Chest, &c. &c. The proprietor has never known an instance where they did not give perfect satisfaction. Several thousand boxes have been sold with the last year, restoring to health persons in almost every stage of consumption, and those laboring under the most distressing colds and coughs. They do not check and dry up the cough, but render it easy, promote expectation, allay the tickling or irritation, and remove the proximate or exciting cause. They are made from a combination of the most valuable expectorant, or cough medicines, and are undoubtedly superior to everything in use for those complaints. Hundreds upon hundreds of certificates have been offered of their wonderful virtues, from those who have been saved from an untimely grave, and restored to perfect health, by using them.

The above Medicine may be obtained at the Drug Store of Messrs. Williams & Haywood, and of Dr. N. L. Stith, with full directions accompanying each box.

PETERS' PILLS

THESE UNRIVALLED PILLS having now acquired a celebrity and a popularity unequalled in the annals of Medicine, and also having obtained the entire confidence, and being used in the private practice of almost the whole body of the Medical Faculty in the United States, Europe, Asia, South America, the West Indies, and a great part of Africa, it is unnecessary to advertise them at length, or to say any thing further of their merits, than by stating the complaints which they are most effective in the cure of, and which are as follows:—yellow and bilious fevers, sore throats, dyspepsia, cramp, liver complaint, sick head-ache, jaundice, asthma, dropsy, rheumatism, enlargement of the spleen, piles, colic, femoral obstructions, heart burn, furred tongue, nausea, distensions of the stomach and bowels, incipient diarrhoea, flatulence, habitual costiveness, loss of appetite, bloch or yellow complexion, and in all cases of torpor of the bowels, where a cathartic or an aperient is needed. They are exceedingly mild in their operation, producing neither nausea, griping nor debility.

The above Pills are for sale in the City of Raleigh by Messrs. Williams & Haywood, and at the Drug Store of N. L. Stith, and in Fayetteville by E. J. Hale, at New York Prices.

Brandreth's Pills.—We have a fresh supply—We were about to say, of this valuable Medicine—but to those who have tried them, it is unnecessary to say so, and those who have not tried them would be slow perhaps to believe us. Our new boxes contain 25 Pills each, the old only have 21. WILL PECK.
